OMAHA, June 5.—Mae Thomas who 243 S. Olive. Near "Flight" termina swallowed a $300 diamond while ex-amining the gems on a jeweler's tray, pleaded not guilty when arraigned in court of a charge of grand larceny, and her attorney, W. W. Dodge, an-nounced a novel line of defense in the

"There will be no prosecution of Miss Thomas." said the lawyer. "She has shown her honesty by offering to return the diamond. We absolutely deny any felonious intent to steal it. Miss Thomas went into the jewelry store with the legitimate purpose of examining the diamonds. While doing so she placed one of the stones between her teeth to test its hardness, and suddenly two detectives rushed at her, and one of them clapped his hands over her mouth. In her fright she swallowed the jewel."

NEW "DOG" FUND IS DISCOVERED.

BIG INSURANCE FIND MADE BY SPECIAL GRAND JURY.

Dr. Gillette, Ex-Vice-President of Mutual Life, Testifies, and It Is Shown He Refunded $10,000 He Had March-Equitable May Mutualize

(BT THE ASSOCIATED PRESS-P.M.) NEW YORK June 5.-The Times to-

NEW YORK June 5.—The Times today says:

Through testimony which Dr. Waiter
R. Gillette formerly vice-president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, gave before a special grand jury, an important "yellow dog" fund has come to light in the Mutual Life of which not trace was found by either the Armstrong or Truesdale committees.

The latter has had fifty accountants at work on the Mutual's books for seven months.

Incidentally Dr. Gillette had refunded to the Mutual about $16,000 which fremained in his hands from the time of his resignation last March.
Of the purposes of this particular "yellow dog" fund little is known except to-the grand jury, for the disclosure by Dr. Gillette took the Mutual's present administration complete; by surprise and the new investigation which President Peabody put under way after things began to some out before the grand jury has ngt proceeded far enough to enable the matter to be traced.

MAY MATERIALIZE.

On the application of the directors of the Equitable Life Assurance Sciclety the judges of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in Brookin, today, unanimously decided to permit the directors plan of mutualization to be carried out. The petition for a modification of the injunction order obtained by Franklin B. Lord, a minority stockholder, preventing the adoption of the mutualization plan-as projected a year ago, was granted.

The modification leaves the stockholders free to adopt the modified charter at the meeting called for June 8, and for the directors to take final action thereon at the adjourned meeting June 29.

Broken in health, the result of a disease contracted on the battle-field, and suffering from a general breakdown, Mr. Nickerson was restored to robust, happy health by the use of Duffy's Pure Malt This is his sincere letter of thanks:

When a man is discouraged and constantly suffering, he very naturally has a deep feeling for the remedy that brings him the happiness attained through robust health.

I take a teaspoonful of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey every morning, beaten up with a raw egg, and two-thirds of a glass of milk. On retiring at night I take a tablespoonful in hot water and sugar.

I take a tablespoonful in hot water and sugar.

Before I began with Duffy's I was badly broken in health and completely run down.

My right leg and foot was cold up to my knee all the time and I could not keep warm nights.

Was also bothered with shakes, contracted through exposure during the Civil War, when I served in the United States Army.

INVADERS EFFECT JUNCTURE. [BI THE ASSOCIATED PRESS-PM]
MEXICO CITY, June 5.—Gen. Leon. Castillo and his followers have effected a juncture with Gen. Toledo, making the total invading force 3000 well-armed men. Some revolutionists have come from below to Acatjutia, which is a Salvadorean port, and will push on to join the main invading column.

News from Guatamaia City shows that President Cabrera is redoubling his efforts for personal safety, and never goes out now without a strong guard. The intelligence bureau of the revolutionists has information that the people of Guatamaia City are eagerly expecting the arrival of Gen. Toledo.

President Cabrera, it is alleged, has not only imprisoned disaffected citisens, but has arrested men who would take no sides in the revolution, and held them as suspects. NCISCO, June &-(Exclu-h) The final report of the on Restoration of Pub-was made to the Recon-

ALCOHOL AS FARM PRODUCT. What the Effect of Its General Manu-

Making.

Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture, says the Salt Lake Tribune, is a strong champion of the removal of tax from denaturised alcohol. In the recent hearing before the Ways and Means Committee he declared that the time will certainly come when the world will have to look to agriculture for the production of its light. fuel and motive power. The day must come, however distant it may yet appear to be, when the earth's deposits of oil and coal and the surface supply of wood will be exhausted, and when it does, to quote the Secretary of Agriculture, "through the medium of alcohol agriculture can furnish in the most convenient form for the use of man this absolutely necessary source of supply."

It is said that the actual contents the contents a fear in the most convenient form the use of letters of our day."

man this absolutely necessary source of supply."

It is said that the actual cost of manufacturing the alcohol ranges from 4 to 15 cents a gallon, and the amount of heat energy in a gallon, combined with its cheapness, makes alcohol the most desirable known substitute for coal and oil products. The part the farmer is to have in its general introduction for fuel and light is to be seen from figures made on the yield of a cohol from various farm products.

An acre of ground planted to corn will yield 140 gallons. One yielding 300

Catarrh

The sense of smell, taste, hearing and sight suffer; the throat and lungs become implicated, and consumption is a frequent result. It causes a discharge from the nose so copious and offensive in many cases that patients feel as if their head was in a state of corruption. The breath becomes tainted and sometimes revoltingly offensive. The patient is subjected to repeated colds until it reaches the lung tissues. It produces more consumption than all

Rqual Suffrage League.

The Woman's Equal Suffrage League held a meeting Monday in the Woman's Club House, with Mrs. Mary A. Kenny in the chair. Mrs. Mary A. Garbutt read an article giving account of the canvass of Oregon on the subject of equal suffrage. James T. Moriarity of Whittler adressed the club on "National Legislation," handling the subject point by point. This is the last meeting of the equal suffragists until the first Monday in September. Announcement was made at the club meeting that the book of Mrs. Caroline M. Severance's life, edited by a club woman of the city, is out. It is called "The Mother of Clubs," and contains an appreciation of the subject of the book matter.

KANSAS CITY (Mo.) June 5.—By an agreement of counsel on both sides, the cases against the packing companies of Swift, Cudahy, Armour and Nelson Morris, charged with accepting rebates, were consolidated in the United States District Court here today, and Judge McPherson agreed to the attempts forestift in cases to day, and Judge McPherson agreed to the attorneys presenting the cases to the jury on a statement of facts. No witnesses will be examined. The attorneys had practically agreed upon their statement today, but as it had not been signed the court ad-journed the cases until Thursday morning. At that time the statement will be read in court, and the cases given to the jury after brief argument. When the present case has been dis-posed of, the Burlington Railway will be tried on charges of granting con-cessions to these defendants.

GREAGE IN SEWER.

GOING AFTER LAUNDRIES.

A crusade was started by the street authorities yesterday against the laundries, to prevent their running their dirty water into the lateral sewers of the city.

It was stated to the Board of Public Works by Street Superintendent Hanley that this water was only permitted to go in the sewer by sufferance, and that recent developments point to damage suits against the right in the sewer was entirely in the sewer was entirely indequate to carry it off, and it backed up into stores through the private inlets to the sewer, in the neighborhood of Seventh and Los Angeles streets, and caused considerable damage.

The sewer inspector was present also and serviced of rape.

NO RACE RULES.

NO RACE RULES.

It is stated that yachts of classes A. B and C shall be governed by the racing measurement now in force, but nothing is said about what racing rules, if any, are to be followed; and the deduction of Herbert Pease was that there were no other rules to govern except those now issued.

The winners in classes A and B are each to receive a cup, and "to the sailing boat, regardless of size, type or rig, making the fastest time around the course, shall be given a cup."

Yachts crossing the finish line after dark shall burn a suitable light on the port side, so that the timer on the breakwater may be able to see the numbers distinctly.

NO MATCH FOR SOLOMON. Kid Does Not Defend Himself, But Says Trite Things About Fake Fight Promoters.

Although much pressure was brought to bear on Tom McCarey to match Kid Solomon with Abe Attell. the fight manager was leary of public opinion, and finally decided yesterday that the match would not be a good one. During the negotiations Solomon brought forward strong arguments in his favor, and had two admirers ready brought forward strong arguments in his favor, and had two admirers ready to bet $1000 each against an equal amount that he could defeat Attell. Attell was willing to take on Solomon, and had the club thought well of the match, would have readily consented to go on for the June date.

In speaking of his past record, Solomon gave out source good talk on who is to blame in fake matches. "What can you expect from an ignorant fighter." said the Kid. "when men prominent in business and claiming to be his friends, come to him and get him to do an unfair trick. I will acknowledge that I have done some things wrong, and am sorry for it, and hereafter will select a manager who not only has standing in the community, but who can help me rise. I will not be tempted by those who rig up something and then leave the fighter to take the abuse, while they get away soot free. I wish the newspapers would get hold of these people who draw fighters into bad repute, and show them up as they should be. Had I been advised by honest people all along I would be at the top now, and if I ever get a chance to fight here again I will show the people that I am honest and ready to bet my own money on myself."

Every garment in the entire collection is the best of its kind and represents the fullest value, whether it be a 25-cent corset cover or a bit of delicate Parisian lingerie. The domestic goods come from the leading American factories -- fresh, crisp garments, made for us in the way we want them, from material of a quality high enough to satisfy the most particular of our customers. The imported ones include some very handsome specimens of hand embroideries from Paris. And there is a vast variety of patterns and prices, ranging from the plainest for everyday wear to the luxurious garments that come across the sea.

Pongee Day

The great durability of pongess, as well as their elegant appearance, has made them highly popular this season. # Sale of Damaged Under-

Tomorrow we are permitted to feature our second sale of factory imperfect undermuslins. In a factory where thousands of dozens of garments are daily made, it is inevitable that some garments should fail of being perfect. Sometimes it is a flaw in the material unnoticed in cutting; sometimes it is an imperfection in trimming, often an oil stain or a skip in the stitching. All these cause the garments to be thrown out of the perfect class. Yet a few moments with a needle will put most of them in splendid condition. We take all of these garments from the best factory, and today have on sale an unusually good lot at about half value. On sale on third floor.

MRS. STORRS FREED

Justice Not Satisfied as to Her Innocence, but No Case is Made. Tells Her First Whole Story and Has Fortune Told.

RETTY little Mrs. Alberta Storrs rode out to Monrovia in charge of the Sheriff yesterday, a very consolate prisoner accused of muring her husband.

Me rode back from Monrovia, not used of anything, dimpled and smilling the control of the state of the s

It began rather tamely, Mr. James trying to show that the deceased had frequently threatened suicide: also that, far from wishing to murder each other, Mr. and Mrs. Storrs were a very leving couple.

H. J. Wharton, one of the secretaries of the Jonathan Club, testified that Storrs once threatened to kill immelf because Miss Dabboy (now Mrs. Storrs) broke an engarement to come to Venice with him. They were a "servibly loving couple." he said, "always and the house of death when Storrs was the house of death when Storrs was killed. Mrs. Storrs saked him, "Do you think my husband will be eternally damned?" And he answered solemnly, "Leave that to the God of Love." She did so.

SISTER CUTTER TALKS BLUFF. People suddenly sait up with a fert when Mrs. Cutter, the celebrated site, was called to the stand. She had a long peaceck feather in her hat, and seemed very nervous, pulling at her to be a seened very nervous, pulling at her lawyer, raising her brows. "Oh, yes, most devoted always—always devoted—especially Roland to Alberta 1 don't think I ever saw a more devoted couple—more true in every way."

She was always making the whore she was always making threats—threatening this, that or the other thing, Well, think I ever saw a more devoted couple—more true in every way."

"Well, then, he handed her a souvenir or something and told her to keep it as he was going to his death. He said they would find his body down by the schoolhouse as he would fall to his horse there and be killed. He said people would think it was an accident, but she would understand."

Mrs. Cutter broke off—smiling at the recollection of the scene.

"Well, you didn't find his body, did you?" asked Mr. James.

"What!" she said, brightly, and adddy you?" asked Mr. James.

IN JUNE APPEARS THE 2ND INSTALLMENT

WHITE FANG reverses the theme of "The Call of the Wild" and tames the wolfish dog of the North. It is the most mature and most finished story Jack London has ever written, and it catches the reader with a tremendous grip from the first chapter to the last. If you have not read the first installment, fill out the appended square, send it to THE OUTING PUBLISHING COMPANY, 35 West 31st St., N. Y. City, and you will receive a May number free.

A Hospital

that is to be erected on Sunset Boulevard and Marion avenue, Angeleno Heights, by the Sunset Hospital corporation. The Sunset Hospital will be the equal in convenience of arrangement, sanitary and hygienic facilities and fullness of equipment of any in the world, and it will be FIRE-PROOF, the only real FIRE-PROOF hospital Southern California will have when it is completed, the only hospital in all of this southern land—the Mesca of the sick and siling—in which the helpless sick and injured will feel safe from death in a horrible form.

The Sunset Hospital will be built on a large plot of ground high above fogs and flood waters, and commanding a magnificent view of mountain and valley—a healthy, cheerful, hope inspiring site, the ideal site for a hospital and sanatorium. The building will be 102x84 feet in dimensions, and three-stories and basement in height; it will be constructed of concrete, brick, hollow tile and steel, thus being as non-combustible as modern skill can make it.

The medical staff of the Sunset Hospital will embrace some of the most prominent, successful and trusted physicians and surgeons of this city, and the confidence and interests of all physicians sending patients to the hospital will be scrupulously respected.

That Los Angeles Hospitals pay extra liberal dividends is not open to question; your own banker will tell you, in affect, that "Los Angeles hospitals have proven among, if not the, best investments in the city"—ask him. Indeed, you can prove the fact with your own memory. Go back in your mind a few years and recall the insignificant proportions of some hospitals now noted, hospitals that have expanded to several times their first size, paying for the expansion out of their profits, and all the while yielding generous dividends to their stockholders.

In hospital enterprises, as in every other kind, the time to become interested is at the beginning, not after the institution is well under way and dividend paying has commenced, or is in sight.

If you are seeking an absolutely safe investment, one that will grow quickly into greater value, and ne that you can sleep soundly over, call and let us tell you about the Sunset Hospital; it will cost you nothing, and the information will be valuable whether you invest or not.

We have a number of physicians among our stockholders—they know how hospitals pay, that is why we have them.

E GIFT OF TONGUES.

Of course it is not miracurious beyond all human comprehen-Prancisco was in flames a month ago nmunication with that city was cut ame like Jerusalem on the day of a living example of the gift of us hirelings of the yellow pres indredfold the catastrophe in San illion times to nothing the event as af-is of the Pacific Coast. The result of ication of falsity was to arouse to the minds of the civilized world. Evhad numerous inhabitants whose residents of California or visitors here. All over the country were Californians visiting in the East. Every large center of population in Europe has its California colony, and the strain of anxiety up the minds of all those who had friends west of the Rocky Mountains was indescribable.

Communication direct with San Francisco was impo stble. Los Angèles being the nearest large center of pulation and business, from all over the world came the mad attempt to get news into San Francisco and from San Francisco through this gateway. Thus it was that the operating-rooms of the great telegraph com-panies became a veritable Pentecostal scene with the mystery of the gift of tongues in full operation. From every city throughout the central States and from every along the Atlantic seaboard, from all the great cities of Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Russia and even China and Japan came messages rushing over the wires and crowding one upon another like armies in pursuit of armies in a wild rush to reach San Francisco. These messages were penned in fifty tongues. They were put upon the wires thousands of miles away. They climbed over mountain tops, spanned rushing streams, dived beneath broad oceans, rushed across the plains, all hurrying wildly to the little room in Los Angeles where they came off of the wires in terse, concentrated English words. The scene was bewildering. The dates tumbled from the wires in an avalanche of little slips, Berlin, Dresden, Brussels, Paris, Marseilles, Geneva, Rome, Naples, Athens, Constantinople, Vienna, Prague, Warsaw, St. Petersburg, Yokohama, Honolulu, Shanghai, Hongkong, Manila, Melbourne, Sidney, pelimell came the whole geography of the globe pouring into that little upper room in the city of Los Angeles. These m had been written in German, French, Italian, Russian, Chinese and Japanese at the points whence they were sent but they all reached the operator in Los Angeles as if converted by magic into the English tongue.

Unseen powers just as intangible as those that sent the tongues of fire on the Apostles' heads, bestowing upon them the gift of tongues, were at work in this amazing operation of the human mind in flashing mo essages from all quarters of the globe into that one little room. Unseen intellects had converted twenty languages all into one, and the mysterious fluid that we call electricity, whose qualities and constitution are as mysterious to us as the power that gave the Apostles their wonderful gift, was at work in transmitting se messages over seas and continents, from widely the separated points upon the globe, all to be concentrated there into a space of a few hundred square feet.

Carlyle says that when the first human pair in the Garden of Eden saw the sun set at the close of day, they doubtless thought he had disappeared forever. When they saw him rise again next morning they beheld a miracle to their minds. Custom has made this one of the most commonplace occurrences in all the experiences of our life to the civilized and to the savage human being alike. So is it with this mysterious agency. When Franklin's kite and wet sliken string brought down the lightning from the clouds to flash from the key at the end of the string to the knuckle of the operator the mystery was very intense. That mysterious agency today is cooking our breakfasts, illuminating our homes and cities, turning night into a blaze of day, painting flowers upon the window panes, ornamenting our buildings in Flesta times, driving our machinery with millions of horse power, driving street cars at the rate of a mile a minute, and making leviathan steamships plow the mighty seas. It is flashing these messages from a thousand geographical points, written in a hundred tongues, and laying them before our eyes with lightning speed, all in our own tongue. We understand just as clearly how the Apostle at Jerusalem spoke one tongue and twenty nationalities heard him in their own vernacular as we do how it is that the touch upon the key at Tokio or Shanghai flashes a message to Los Angeles and records it so many thousand miles away. There is no miracle about it because we understand that it is done purely by natural laws but the mystery is as profound as the human mind ever grappled with in vain to solve

RECOMPENSE.

The king may be oppressed with woes Such as the peasant never knows; The stately palace on the hill May be the constant haunt of pain of such as shall never fill The little cottage on the plain

The princess riding past in state And fondly cheered by small and great, May sigh for love that is denied, And doubt that life possesses The lackey's eager, waiting bride May have no dreams beyond his arms.

The workman, when the day is done, see his rosy children run All lithe of limb and blithely set To meet him halfway down the street: And as they shout he may forget The furnace and its blinding heat.

The master, at the close of day, May lock his desk and turn away. To find all dark and desolate The house that once was filled with joy-To pass the night where Death or Fate Has forced an entrance to destroy. -[8. E. Kiser, in Chicago Record-Herald.

PROFESSIONAL IDEALS: THE MINISTER.

HAT profession more noble, what office more sublime, what loftier responsibility, what higher dignity may be conferred upon any one than the service of ministering to the supreme needs of the human spirit; what greater honor than to be in name and in deed a "physician of the soul."

Doctor of Divinity should be the title of one who employs human means for divine ends. The "man of God" is the agent or mediator between man the finite and God the Infinite power of Love and Righteousness, who should be himself moving, however slowly, in the direction toward which he aims to lead others. He must know watching, waiting and suffering, the cry of the heart, hungry, the needs of the soul families of the cry of the heart-hungry, the needs of the soul-famished, even as the medical doctor diagnoses physical conditions, adminis-tering remedies to the needs of his patients.

Again, a clergyman, it is said, is a man of learning who erforms sacred duties. He is therefore not to me regarded as a Godhead infallible, or final authority, but as a moral and spiritual leader who ever keeps his eye on the Absolute, the ideal of perfection which mankind may never hope to attain, yet toward which they must ever move. In order to be a true physician of the soul, a real minister, it is not necessary that one should have attained to all things, to have discovered a palliative for every ill, but that one should primarily accept his duties on principle and not on fees. That he should be unre-mittent in his search for the keys which unlock human One whose meditation or prayer is not a verbal glorification of God or the ecclesiastical enumeration of religious tenets, but the fervent and heartfelt yearning for communion with the Spirit of Supreme Wisdom for illumination of a soul consecrated to divine se

Learning there should be, but more than this are universal sympathy, moral courage and spiritual insight, the triple essentials for a successful clergyman or religious leader. To achieve greatness in any line the psychical compound necessary is a strong heart, a strong intellect, a strong will. And hence, no matter to what magnificent heights of scholarship a man may attain, falling broad sympathies, a courageous soul and the power of divination, he is out of place in the ministry.

The minister, the physician of the soul, must "touch if he would heal." He must be able to quicken sluzzish he would heal." He must be able to quicken sluggish life currents, cheer the despondent, give aid to the needy. ope to those in despair.

The ideal minister, having untold possibilities for soul-growth within himself, will be able to sow the seed in others, and himself, constantly gaining in spiritual stat-ure, will inspire confidence in his followers to yield to his influence, when he will steadily lead them on to green pastures and beside still waters.

Nor will the true minister be unmindful of the blackers.

Nor wi'l the true minister be unmindful of the blackest He will not be content to let any wander from the fold, the meanest and the most worthy will be equal objects of his care and solicitude.

To succor and to save, these are the burning watch words to kindle the sacred fire of love and enthusiasm on the hallowed altar of the ministerial profession. To teach truth, and nothing but the truth—that conduces to a clarification of conscience and righteous freedom of the human spirit. To do this is the final purpose of the legitimate spiritual advisers, to do this, and to accept no compromise to do less than this. For any material consideration, social ostracism or ecclesiastical persecu that can deter a man from enforcing the moral law essays to promulgate-any coercion or threat that will let him part with his integrity, makes a traitor of him to the cause of moral and spiritual progress, by striking a blow at the very foundations of truth itself.

The moral and religious teacher, while guided and helped forward to ever greater spiritual conquests, through efforts at self-perfection, cannot, however, hope to wait until he has arrived at a perfect state of being before attempting to deliver his message. The essential thing is that he should know the way to the perfect life and better than others to demonstrate it. Thus he must have the divine fire and force to goad others on to the life beautiful, to lead them to love to walk in the ways of righteouspe

Not that he be divine is required of him-but that he be fervent, faithful, sincere and thoroughly imbued with the divine spirit, so that it flow from him, inspiring, vivifying, restoring the soul as the touch of living waters.

The effectual spiritual leader must be a vital source where the hungry and the thirsty find meat and drink. He must be eyes to the blind, ears to the deaf, a tongue to the mute; a crutch to the lame, a rod and a staff to the weary pilgrim. All this, while constantly separating the dross from the gold in his own nature, sifting and refining, until he shall himself be purged of the clogging elements which he seeks to eliminate from the moral and spiritual life of others.

The ideal minister must know how to watch, to listen with open heart and kindling mind to man and nature for their secrets. He must feel the pulse of his people; sonal touch even as the man of medical science if he would heal. And no instance should be too low, no disorder of the spirit too virulent for the approach of the true physician of the soul, no soul so insignificant that he would not minister to its needs. No opportunity he would pass by in which to advise, to instruct, to en-courage, or to inspire. No time when he would not gladly sacrifice for his mission, to fire with the spirit of divine truth the hearts of men; when he would not obey his call to succor and to save.

A VAST REGION OF DESERT NOW DE-VOTED TO GRAIN AND FRUIT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ENATCHEE.-For the past week I have been moving about through different parts of the inland empire. I entered it from British Columbia by the Great Northern Railway, going first to Spokane. From there I traveled both east and west; and I am now here on the Columbia River in the Big Bend intry at Wenatchee in the Wenatchee Valley.

I despair of giving you an adequate conception of this part of the United States. The inland empire was to a large extent a desert until a few years ago; and now, it is only in the northwest that the people have begun to appreciate its value. The formation is so curious that one should see it for himself to properly know it. In brief, it includes the vast region lying between the Bit-ter Root and Cascade Mountains which is drained by the

We are discovering new lands every year, and some of the best parts of our country are yet to be re-claimed.

A great deal of the Big Bend region can be farmed without irrigation, and there are reclamation projects on hand which will redeem mfilions of acres. This very land through which I have been riding could have been bought about a decade ago for five or ten cents an acre. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company owned a vast quantity of it, consisting of alternate sections for fifty miles along its track. It had the lands examined by scientific experts, and on the basis of their representation entific experts, and on the basis of their representation a great deal of the concession went for a song. The same lands are now worth $20 and upward per acre. They are producing wheat, and it is believed they will continue to yield for a generation without fertilization. The lands along the Great Northern Railway are equally good, and the whole region will rapidly settle.

Take the bleak and bare hills just opposite this town of Wenatchee. They are being cut up into farms and will soon be covered with wheat. A short time ago you could not have given them away, and now they are worth feet below the level of the wheat fields, and carried down to the boats on aërial transcarrying the empty cars back.

Mr. Davies has now seven boats on this ing wheat, fruit and passengers. He tells country is rapidly settling, and that from the river eastward is a vast expanse of There are also dairy farms, and farther up, ments. The cattle country begins at the so Okanogan, and beyond it is a rich mining to the settle country of the settle country begins at the source.

All along the way are little valleys devos somewhat similar to the Wenatchee Valley, a letter is written. These are being opened up who are planting orchards, and thus devel promises to be one of the great fruit-raising a the United States.

In the Wenatchee Valley.

I can give you the best idea of this section ing what is going on here in the Wenatches is situated in almost the center of Washington the junction of the Great Northern Railread in The Wendichee Vallett Columbia River and its tributaries. It comprises most of idaho and a large part of Eastern Washington and Oregon. It equals in extent all of the New England States, together with New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Maryland, and it has millions of acres which are yet to be settled. be settled.

This territory was once a vast sea, almost one-fourth the size of the United States proper. It is more than 700 miles wide and 1000 miles long. It was penned in by the mountains, and its waters rose until they finally broke out through the cañons which now form parts of the Snake and Columbia River Valleys. They cut their way down to a depth of 2000 feet, and drained the sea, leaving an immense plain of alluvial soil 3000 feet above the level of the ocean.

Lava and Volcanic Ash.

This soil of the juland empire is made of the drops or silt washed down from the mountains, and in addition a vast amount of volcanic ash. Ashes are one of the best fertilizers known. Those made from Canada hardwood are now selling to farmers for $22 a ton. They are used largely for orchards and grain raising, and they form a food for the land which will last for many years.

The inland empire has the same constituents in its soil; but its ashes come from volcanoes.

In crossing the Big Bend country I saw lava everywhere. In some places the plains are covered with it, and in others it rises into bluffs and broken fragments exceled with supply. Along the Columbia River there streaked with sulphur. Along the Columbia River there are streams of lava which look as though the molten mass had hardened as it rushed against the wind. In other places it has turned to a gravel, and again it has split up into angular-shaped rocks of even size, looking for all the world as though it had been run through a stone grapher to make paying material.

stone crusher to make paving material.

It is hard to imagine a more desolate, thirsty land than this, when undeveloped. There are no trees, no green bushes and all is bleak and bare. It is a desert; and no one would imagine that it would raise enough to feed a jack rabbit. Still, right in the midst of such territory vast wheat fields are now to be seen. There are patches of green everywhere. Farms have grown up in the midst of the bleakness and the desert itself is yielding forty and more bushels of wheat to the acre.

I passed through on the railroad I saw many ragged little stations of one-story wooden buildings. The only large structures in them were wheat sheds and elevators, with here and there a flour mill. These sheds are filled with grain at the time of harvest. They will not hold the crop, and the overflow is stacked up in bags This inland empire is now producing som like 50,000,000 bushels of wheat in one year, and still the Big Bend country has been hardly touched. The State of Washington alone produced 30,000,000 bushels last year, and the prospect is that it will do better this year.

The New Lands of the West.

I have been writing considerable about Canada and its wheat belt. The Canucks have an empire yet to develop, and they think that Uncle Sam has reached the maximum of his farming possibilities. There was never a greater a good price as farming lands. They are cultivated without irrigation, and, to the surprise of the scientific iseacres, are producing wonderful crops

Grain from the Desert.

I find that grain is now being grown all along the Co-lumbia, and here and there almost everywhere through-out the inland empire. The land is handled on a mighty scale, the finest of agricultural machinery being used. There are steam plows now turning the soil which will cut nine furrows at a time, and steam harvesters, one of which will reap and thrash fifty acres of wheat in a day. Such machines cut a swath fourteen feet wide and deliver the grain in bags. The expenses of cultivation are so reduced that wheat is now grown at a cost of 28 cents a bushel, which means a net 100 per cent. profit. I hear all sorts of fairy stories as to big crops. Farmers say single acres have produced seventy bushels of wheat, and one quarter section is cited as turning out 10,000 s in one year

Speaking of the wheat along the Columbia, I had a chaft the other night with Mr. T. A. Davies, general manager of the Columbia and Okanogan Steamship Company, whose boats run about 150 miles up the Columbia and Okanogan Rivers, through a country not reached by the railroads. He says that his vessels brought more than a million bushels of wheat down to the Great Northern at Wenatchee last year, and that a great part of the country is being put under wheat.

The farmers haul the grain to the river landings and pile it there in bags in mounds. At one station last fall 28,000 sacks, containing 90,000 bushels of grain, were brought in for shipment, and there were stacks of bags all along the river. In many places the river runs 2000

Amounting to Something. THE STORY OF DORIS, WHO WAS "INATTENTIVE, AND RUDE."

By a Special Contributor.

ORIS burst through the door of her father's office like a whirlwind and threw herself on a chair by his desk. He smiled. He was accustomed to these abrupt appearances. In fact, he had evolved an expectation to equal anything his impetuous daughter might do Well, Doris, what is it now? Old Biddy hatched family, or have you taught Don a new trick more wonderful than all the rest?"

"No, Papa," picking up a pen and jabbing it flercely into the blotter, "but it's all a mistake. I should have been born a Hottentot or a Mojave Indian. I wish I had. I hate being civilized. I'm a disgrace to the family

"Who told you all this, my child," interposed her father, gravely rescuing his pen from destruction.

"Well, Auntie said: 'Girls of 16 should have repo of manner and dignity; be cold and composed like a-doorknob.' She didn't say doorknob, but that's what she meant. Anyway, I ought to be one and have no responsibility except to keep my screws in.

"You might find it a trifle confining. But what have you been doing now, Doris?"

"Taking a vocal lesson.

Just here Doris developed an interest in the paper knife out of all proportion to its importance, and her face wore a most inscrutable look.

"Prof. Strauss told Auntle my lesson was a failure," she explained, finally. "He said I was 'difficult, instructive and rade."

'W-e-l-l. I was inattentive." she admitted, rejuctantly "but he didn't care—he's used to it. It's because I said his hands should have a baseball knuckle like Uncle Frank's, a scar, a blister—anything. They're so dis-gracefully white and soft," finished she scornfully. "Or a scratch like this," said her father, touching the little brown hand on which Ajax, her pet Angora, had left a long, vivid mark of his displeasure.

"But, papa," persisted Doris, "I hate vocal training, stiff dresses, and everything proper and sensible. Shall

I ever really amount to anything, do you think?"

An expression of pain came about his firm lips.
"You're like your mother, child," he replied, sadly.
"Heaven knows the comfort I have found in that, so ft would hardly occur to me to wish you different, except, perhaps a shade less—tempestuous. Yes, you'll find opportunities to prove your worth of character—many of them. Just now, do you think you could add up these accounts—accurately, mind, no mistakes?"

"Yes, indeed," she replied, promptly turning every—"

with a special delivery," and with a laughing backward glance, she was gone.

Walking rapidly, she soon reached the postoffice, mailed the letter, and then chose, for her return home, one of the busy, crowded streets of the city.

The day was intolerably hot, and she sauntered along slowly in the shade of the buildings. There was a be-wildering mixture of trucks, cars, howling newsboys, autos, and all the confused traffic of a city street at 5 o'clock

Doris noticed, in a casual way, two little negro children on the opposite side of the street, alone—mere ba-bles, threading their way, happy and careless, among the crowds of people. Then something near caught her attention, and when she looked again they were crossing the street. She watched them closely, anxiously.

Ah, there, they paused! In pure baby ignorance and perverseness, they bent over the glistening car rails, and kicked their stubby toes into the dust. Their little dark faces shone in happy unconcern—yes, smiled delightedly in the very face of a fast-coming trolley.

And then came a wild moment when horses were reigned back, when the great crowds paused, and every sound was stilled into intense silence.

With one glance Dorls measured the situation. She knew, as did all who saw their peril, that no earthly he car on that

As quickly as thought can act, and with that strange self-possession in the face of a sudden danger to which ome natures are born, she sprang before the trolley and half-dragged, half-carried the two wondering children to the opposite side of the track just as the heavy car rolled by-the motorman white as death, tugging desperately at the brakes.

And the crowd, which a moment before had held its breath and shut its eyes as with vivid fancy it pictured the end, now stretched forth eager, glad hands to the negro babies.

And there Uncle Frank, happening along, saw Doris, her eyes shining, her face pale and set; two little woolly, black heads clasped close to her as though she yet feared for their safety, while two lusty young voices roared in angry protest at being thus rudely snatched from happy play.

"A brave act!" murmured the crowd, and as Doris
"A brave act!" murmured and drove away, hats were climbed into her uncle's cart and drove away, hats were thrown into the air and cheer after cheer followed her.

When her father heard the story, he said, with a queer break in his voice. "This defrays the expenses of many poor vocal lessons, my child. I have—yes, I have strong hopes of your amounting to something."

That night, in a little shanty, out in the suburbs, two negro children with wide-open, wondering eyes, listened to the same story—slightly exaggerated. Two little ones knelt as their mother concluded, reverently:

"Twas an angel ob de Lawd, honey as swooped down and toted ye out ob danger. Down on yo knees, both ob ye."

MERCY FOR A DESERTER.

A DRAMATIC INCIDENT IN THE CONFEDERATE ARMY DURING WAR OF THE REBELLION.

By a Special Contributor.

The late Gen. John B. Gordon, the last of the corps commanders of Gen. Lee's Confederate Army of North-ern Virginia, gave this story to the narrator only a few before he died. A few days before Christmas; 1863, when the army of . Lee was suffering the greatest privations, there was a dramatic scene in the tent of the judge-advocate general. The morning was cold, the wind was bleak, the ground was covered with snow. The wood fire ed to make the cold more penetrating.

Edward Cooper, wearing the gray uniform of a private soldier in the Confederate army, stood before the court-martial charged with desertion. The facts had been stated by the prosecution, and the prisoner was asked to produce any witnesses he might have for his defense. He calmly replied: "I have no witnesses."

Astonished at the calmness and dignity of the soldier, and the indifference with which he seemed to have sub-mitted to an inevitable fate, Gen. Battle said to him: 'Have you no defense whatever? Is it possible that you abandoned your comrades and deserted your colors in the presence of the enemy and without reason?"

"There was a reason," replied Cooper, "but it will not avail me before a military tribunal."

rhaps you are mistaken," replied the general. "You are charged with the highest crime known to military law, and it is your duty to make known the cause or es which influenced your action."

Thereupon Cooper approached the president of the court and presented a letter, saying as he did so: "There, general, is what led me to go."

The letter was proffered as the prisoner's defense. It was in these words:

"Dear Edward: Since your connection with the Confederate army I have been prouder of you than ever fore. I would not have you do anything wrong for the world; but, before God, Edward, unless you come home we must die. Last night I was aroused by little Eddie crying. I called to him and said: 'What is the matter, Eddie?' He said: 'Oh, mamma, I am so hungry!' And Lucy-your darling Lucy-she never complains, but she is growing thinner and thinner every day. Before God, Edward, unless you come home we must die.

"YOUR MARY." Turning to the prisoner Gen. Battle said: you do when you received that letter?"

Cooper replied: "I made application for a furlough. It was rejected. Again I made application, and that was That night I wandered around our camp, thinking of my home, the wild eyes of Lucy looking up at me and the burning words of Mary seething in my brain. I was no longer the Confederate soldier—I was the father of Lucy and the husband of Mary. If every gun in the battery had been fired at me, I would have crossed those lines. When I reached home Mary flung her arms around my neck and sobbed: 'Oh, my Edward! I am so glad you got your furlough.' She must have felt me shudder, for she turned pale as death, and catching her breath at every word she said: 'Have you come without your furlough? Go back, Edward. Go back! Let me and the children go down to the grave, but for heaven's sake do not tarnish the honor of our name!"

Every officer in that court-martial was visibly affected by the defense, but each one in turn pronounced the verdict of "guilty." The proceedings of the court were reviewed by Gen. Lee, and upon the records was written:

"Headquarters A.N.V.-The finding of the court is approved. The prisoner is pardoned and will return to his R. E. LEE, General

The court-martial could reach no other conclusion than to find him guilty of desertion. The commanding general could pardon him and did pardon him. Ed-ward Cooper was afterward a brave Confederate soldier. The officers raised some money out of their slender means, and sent relief to the wife and children.

THE ORTHODOX CHURCH.

WORSHIP DISTINGUISHED FOR MUCH CEREMONY AND LITTLE SPIRIT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

T. PETERSBURG.-The religion of the Greek Orthodox church is a mass of mysterious rites suppose to have supernatural power. The absolute lack of the spiritual, and the inordinate importance of the ceremonial, are manifested by the following instances, which are only a few of many that might be quoted. A robber killed a traveler and rifled his baggage, but refrained from eating a piece of cooked meat which he found in the victim's belongings, because it happened to be a fast An assassin about to attempt the murder of an attaché of the Austrian Embassy in St. Petersburg, went first to the church to commend his undertaking to the protection of the saints. On another occasion when a burglar was looting a church he found it hard to extract the jewels from the frame of one of the ikons. The thief paused in his work to make a prayer to a certain saint, offering to place a rouble's worth of tapers before its image if given assistance in securing the valuables.

Ikons play an important part in all the religious observances of the Russian people. These sacred pictures are found in every dwelling and in every public house. They are even seen in dining halls and rallway stations. The ikon is usually a half-length figure representing the Savior, the Madonna, or some saint. It is usually executed upon a yellow or gold ground, varying in size from a square inch to several square feet. Frequently the whole picture, excepting the hands and face, is covered with a metal plaque so arranged as to outline the form and have the effect of drapery. These sacred emblems are often ornamented with pearls and other precious tones of great value.

Wonder-Working Ikons.

There are two kinds of ikons, ordinary and miracleworking. Those supposed to be of a miraculous char-acter are kept in the churches. All such have a mysterious origin inasmuch as they are not believed to have been made by mortal hands. A monk or some church official will have a vision and then announce that a miraculous ikon is to be found at a certain place. Some-times it will be buried, or again it will be hanging from a tree. The sacred treasure will be removed to the nearest church, the news of its discovery creating a sensation in the community. Crowds of devout worshipers congre-gate to prostrate themselves before the heaven-sent picture, and many cases are reported where sufferers have been cured of disease.

One of the famous Madonnas is kept in a church in Whenever the Czar visits that city he usually goes direct from the railroad station to pray in the chapel where this particular ikon is located. Rich parshioners have the privilege of taking this miracle-torking picture to their homes. The carriage containing ishioners have the it is always recognized because the driver is bareheaded. The people in the streets invariably take off their hats sacred possession passes. Wherever it is taken a short ceremony is performed before it, after which it is carried through all the rooms of the house. The servants kneel on the floor so it may be carried over them. A notable thing concerning the travels of this famous symbol is that whenever it is absent from the chapel it is replaced by a copy so nearly like the original tha: only an expert can tell the difference, consequently there is no interference with the devotions of the faithful, nor check in the flow of contributions from the worshipe

When the authorities of the Russian church determfned to proselyte the Finns, little difficulty was encountered, because of the temperate demands that were made upon them. The principal requirement was that the new converts should be baptized, and little resistance was converts should be baptized, and little resistance was offered to this performance so long as it occurred during the summer. Thus we find a whole people accepting the semblance of regeneration without any knowledge, or understanding of the significance of the religion they were embracing. The priests found that little bribes judiciously distributed proved a great stimulus in securing candidates, and it is significant that as a result of the pay system many of the converts insisted on having the ceremony performed several times

One of the objections the Finns raised against accepting the new faith was the long and numerous fasts imposed on its followers, but this exception was met by atimating that there would be no serious co if the abstinences were not strictly observed. However, the attempt was made to enforce the rules of the church by circulating the story that the ikons which were hung up in each house had the power of communicating to the priests the names of all who were negligent in their ligious duties. For a while this was popularly believed, but experience tended to gradually weaken the faith in the power of the ikons to spy on the people. But it is said that some of the more prudent householders still take the precaution of turning the faces of the pictures to the wall whenever a forbidden meal be

A writer well acquainted with the charact Finns gives this instance of their straight ner of praying: "Look you, O Nicholas of my neighbor, Michael, has been slanders or if he has not, perhaps he will do so, i he is mean enough to do almost anythin ders me you must not believe him. MODERN TRANSLATIONS OF BARD OF AVON'S MASTERPIECES.

> By Strickland W. Gilliland. IV .- THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

N a dago settlement called Pad-wah, if you pronounce it right, and called almost anything if you don't, was the sumptuous dump of a lieutenant of industry named Baptista. Half the time he carried his right arm a sling by reason of acute coupon-clippers' paralysis. Among his other assets and liabilities were two dizzy daughters, Katharina and Bianca.

Bi was all to the mayonnaise in the matter of dispos tion, as well as of looks, while Kate had a dander that was a cross between a glass-eyed bronco, a package of cayenne pepper, and a bottle of tabasco. She was easy to look at; but that's a good place to stop talking about her if you're not a knocker. If a day passed without her upbraiding her father and sister and abrading a few servanus, great uneasiness was felt. She was the Ben Tillman of Italy.

cause Bianca looked like a pleasant sugar coat to Baptista's money pill, a platoon or so of toll shunners camped on the younger girl's trail and wanted to marry her the worst way, which means for her money. Among those present whenever the butler went to sweep the front steps were Lucentio, Gremio, and Hortensio. Gre-mio was the only sere and yellow in the herd. The oth-ers were still anxiously reading the wild-oats crop bul-

But Baptista was very much reynard. Was he going to lose his little Bi, and have that four-em-dash-andto lose his little Bi, and have that four-em-dash-and-two-exclamation-marks fly-up-the-creek left on his un-protected hands? Unanimously not. If he had to lose his joy, his sorrow went also. This was the proposition he sicked onto every calf-eyed hardupski that came drooling around about Bianca. It held every one of them for awhile. It was nice to have money, but hard came too hard, with billious Kate pinned to it.

Hortensio beat it with the rest, and was sitting at home, wondering if he couldn't raise money any other way, when his friend Patruchio, a dead-game sport from way, when his friend Patruchio, a dead-game sport from Vecona, came carrying his trunk, and proudly announcing that he and his man would be on the household roster for some time. Hortensio was as glad to see him as people always are to see company when they are short, but managed to conceal his joy. Then, in a confidential moment he spilled the whole yarn to Pete.

Now, Pete was the sort that are always hunting trouble, and when he got to looking over the verbal plans and specifications of Kate, as per her unenthusiastic would-be brother-in-law, he becan to sit up and take no-and specifications of Kate, as per her unenthusiastic would-be brother-in-law, he began to sit up and take notice. He had become blawzay from fooling with the cling variety of peach, and the prospect of roping one that had never been manhandled certainly made his mouth water. He had a nerve that no dentist could deaden, and that had lived through several years' experience in house-to-house canvassing for "The Royal Towpath of Life," in two volumes, bound in calf and sold on subscription only. sold on subscription only.

"Horty, old boy," he said, "cheer up. Twenty-three for your worry. From the way you have doped the old man's collateral cluster, it's enough to make it worth a man's while to hitch with the harpy. I've been on the man's while to hitch with the harpy. I've been on the stock exchange myself, and the chances are I wouldn't hear her wildest tantrum, or if I did, it would seem like a fur cap dropping down a deep well and lighting on a feather bed. And, if the worst came to ditto, I flatter me I can rise a little of Sherman's definition of war myself. Take me to her."

And Hortensio did. They arrived at the million-ducat hovel of Baptista just after Kate had been amusing her-self by tying her sister up with a bed cord and slapping her, and telling their expostulating papa where he got off at. So when Pete began talking to the old man about that nice girl he came to collect, Baptista thought "a couple of tuts! Here's another one after Bl." straining an impulse to knock Peter's block off, he told him the mistake.

"Guess again, papa," said Pete. "It's that fifty-seven variety sister of hers that I must add to my collection. The female go-devil for mine. You and my governor went to school together at Oberlin, so you know that part of it. I have enough wealth to have spoilt any common young man. At least that's the effect it has had on me. And now if you make the property consid-eration big enough I'm just annex this Canada thistle of yours and have her eating out of my hand inside of a eek or two. Am I on?"

"It's a bet," sald Baptista, wondering where the catch was. Then he went ahead and gave a list of Stranded Oil stock and town lots in Hoboken that would go with the girl, also promising a double number of trading stamps. And Pete, who hadn't been in any sort of scrape that was really interesting for a long time, was tickled clean through, and told the old man to unleash

When Kate came in. Pete called her by her front name and announced their nupitals. This removed the zephyrs from her tops'is somewhat, but she kad enough breath left for a peppery come-back. Pete landed a short-arm conversational counter to the short ribs, and Kate upper-cut, but fell short, owing to a quick side There was no Dotty Dialogue business about that at all. requirements made of them. But this is The worse she got, the better Pete seemed to be enjoy-id. They are absolutely ignorant of the ing himself, and it had Kate groggy but game at the end of the first round. She was used to the kind of people that fell dead when she said "Boo," and she had enjoyed booming the undertaking business. When she had a husky one in front of her who swallowed greedily and yelled "More" when she dealt her worst cards, it was different. She told her father, who crawled out under the sofa about that time, that the friend he had brought was all to the bughouse, and that he ought to be taken back before his regular keeper got lonesome. Then Pete told Baptista and the rest of the gutta perchas that but-ted in at that moment that they had had a very pleasant session, indeed, and that she was dead in love with him aiready. "It's us to the altar next Sunday."

The day of the wedding came, and everybody was eady. But no Pete. Everybody was perfectly dippy. ready. But no Pete. Everybody was perseculy unpoliced. Kate had a hemorrhage of talk that would have scorched an asbestos curtain. Turning on the tear faucet she and old Baptista for once said: hiked for the hay, and old Baptista for once said:
"Don't blame her a bit."

And then came Pete. Oh, no; he wasn't the scarecrow, at all. Neither was his horse a cadaver. Huh-uh That plug he was riding had cornered the blemish market and was holding for a rise. If there was any discase he didn't have, he'd been exposed to it and had put it on the waiting list till he had room for it. He din't have enough fat on him to lubricate the muzzle of a gimlet, and the buzzards simply sat on the fence and tightened their belts and waited. Pete himself looked as tightened their belts and waited. Pete himself looked as if he had taken a bath in a glue vat and rolled through a junk shop. Everybody laughed but father, who was glad just the same that the relief expedition had come any old way. They told Pete to hurry up and get dressed so he could see Kate and go to church, as the preacher was there and the crowd of rubbernecks outside was threatened with cervical paralysis. "Dress, nothin?" said Pete. "This is my wedding outfit. It's me Kate's hitching to, not my tors."

I don't suppose any-body ever saw another trousseau like that, or a wedding either, for that matter; for when the preacher asked her if she'd have him, Pete butted in and said: "You bet your life, old Gloomy Gus. What do you suppose she's here for? To buy a box of invisible hairpins or a pair of dress shields? If you'll try to be intelligent for a few minutes, I'll buy the headache powders after-

Well, this scared the knot tyer so bad he dropped his book, and when he stooped to pick it up, Pete swatted him one on the head that sent him down for the count. Pete tore around till the job was done satisfactorily, and called for a highball, then and there. When he had nearly finished it, he took the leavings and threw them into the scraggly whiskers of the janitor, who was standing there goggling at him, which shows how popular janitors were even in that day. Then Pete put his arms around Kate's neck, right there in church, and kissed her, so it sounded like a cow pulling her feet out of a swamp. Talk about a Newport monkey dinner— that Pete boy had Harry Lehr looking like a piece of ound cake that had been rained on.

And maybe the old gossips weren't dripping at the

After they'd got home to Baptista's house, Pete said: "Well, folks, it's clever of you to see me through this way, and I want you to have a nice time at this wedding dinner. I can't stay myself. I make it a rule never to stay at my wedding dinner. Come on, Kate; let's trek for home."

"Nit-ovitch for Katey," said the pleasant girl, recovering her breath, which she had misplaced during that alkinds-of-a-wedding ceremony. "Take your old duds and hike. Skidoo for yours; but it's camping here with pa for mine. I know which side of my uneeda has the eleo on, and after these little pleasantries at the meeting-house, I have a full view of my finish if I go home with you. On your way. Beat it!"
"After you, me maple drip. These other four-flushers I'll move you same as if you were a baby grand. Get me? Come on with your loving husband or I'll knock your block off."

She went. That's the way a woman loves to be man-

Going home, the knee-sprung horse Kate was on, took Going home, the knee-sprung horse kate was on, took a stumble for himself, sent Kate in a mud hole, and lay down on her to rest. It was a horse on Kate. Pete gave his servant a licking while Kate lay there and tried to remember the stitch of a chair tidy she had been crocheting last week. Finally, she got up, coaxed Pete to quit whipping the boy, while he cussed her out, and the horses ran away. He gave all the servants what-for when he got home, and everything that was brought to when he got home, and everything that was brought to the table he sent back and raised Cain over.

When the tailor brought in dresses and things that had been ordered for Kate, Pete said the things looked as if they had been cut out with a dull axe by moon-light, and sent them back. Kate didn't have any more chance to beef than a man has to talk at a pink tea, and she was getting pretty sick of ragchewing. Probably between pains in her otherwise empty stomach, and her tiredness at hearing a constant rumpus, she had a few little hunches that maybe she hadn't been any human sunbeam herself. More than likely. For within three days she'd agree with her husband, no matter what he said, and was about the most bridal-wise girl ever.

When he was fully convinced that she was all to the meek and lowly, and would stay broke, Pete gathered her up and took her back home, where they had a bully od time, and Kate began making herself more unpopu lar than ever by prating around to other women about their duties to their husbands.

Argentine Pampas.

GLIMPSES OF LIFE SEEN THERE BY A PASADENAN.

By a Special Contributor.

HE pampas of Argentine correspond very closely to the Mississippi Valley of the States and the great plains of the Canadian Northwest, but on a showwn they would prove far truer to the name of "plains" than anything we have north of the Isthmus of Panama. Nowhere else in the world is there so large an area that approaches so near to an absolute level as do the pampas. The exigencies of railroad building best illustrate this Look at a large-scale map of any of the flattest of our Middle-Western States and observe how no red line, representing a railroad, holds to a straighter course than increasing in importance. Formerly, master and man lived alike, both in mud huts and on a diet of carne asado, galletas and maté. Now, all this is for the peons while the master divides the time between his palatial estancia house, where he lives like a medieval baron, and Buenos Ayres and Europe. Probably nowhere else in the world, certainly not outside of the great cities, in the world, certainly not outside of the great cities, is there so great a gulf between the standard of living of the highest and the lowest. Nowhere have I seen such lavishly-run establishments as those of these land kings of Argentina, both native and British, and nowhere among Caucasians have I seen such primitive quarters and such hard living as among the peons and gauchos of the same country. The eight or ten weeks that I have spent in various parts of the pampas were almost equally divided between these diametrically opposite ways of living, giving me all the advantage of sharp contrast in showing the one up against the other. sharp contrast in showing the one up against the other. It is an amusing and rather novel experience to sit with representing a railroad, holds to a straighter course than that of a row of children playing hippity-hop across a broad lawn. This is because the country is not level; up on a horse-skull stool and suck maté through a bom-

the curves are to reduce a gradient that cannot be avoided by cuts or fills. Now look at a railroad map of Argentina and see how the lines radiate from Buenos Ayres like the spokes of a wheel. Whether northwest to Rosario and Cordoba, west to the Andes, southwest to the Pampa Central, or south to Mar del Plata and Bahia Blanca, their course is invariably almost perfectly direct. The Buenos Ayres and Pacific Railway has the longest "straight" in the world, where, between Vedia and Mackenna, in the heart of the pampa, the rails run for 175 miles without an inch of curve, and but for an "S" at the former place, would continue so for 206 miles. This is indicative of the real thing in level land.

To the average inhabitant of the pampas a gentle swell on the bosom of the plain is a thing of interest, and a hill a thing to revere; I don't know exactly what his idea of heaven is, but I feel perfectly safe in assuming that We build our heavens of the it contains mountains. stones of our desires, truly enough, but as the current of our desires usually runs to something that we have not, it follows that the plans and specifications we draw up for our "hereafters" must contain many new de-partures. What we want loses most of its charm when it becomes what we have; hence he who comes near-est satistion in this world has the less to look forward to in the next one he plans for himself. There is much the pampan does not have, and therefore the more to look forward to; least of all has he mountains, from which I give hills and dales and rugged peaks the first place in the heaven of his desires.

The pampas of today are not the pampas of thirty years ago. Then, the prevailing pursuits were pastoral: cannot help it, rather than for any other reason. They row, those horticultural take the lead, and are rapidly farm as gentlemen farm in England, and their kennels

But whatever, and by whomever dispensed, it was tendered with a free and unforced kindliness that re-

Talking with an Englishman in Bahia Blanca a while ago, he divided his countrymen who owned estancias in the pampas into two classes: Those who were gentle-men when they came to the country, and those who were not gentlemen when they came to the country, and those who were not gentlemen when they came to the country, but had since become such through the accession of wealth fol-lowing their foresight and good management. The defi-nition of gentleman herein implied may be somewhat open to question, otherwise the statement gives a very good idea of the situation. They are all gentlemen; only part of them came ready-made, and the others made themselves. I met many of both classes, and as hostz I would say that neither leave anything to be desired; as practical farmers, those of the acquired gentility seem to have rather the better of it. The latter do not return to England every summer on a visit, have fewer fads and fancies, will use American machinery when it proved to them that it will do twice as much work with less men than the English, and in many other ways display more "horse sense" than the born gentleman. Most of these are making money faster than they can count it. The others are making money, too, but because they

His master begged to be excused on account of indisposi-tion. So I breakfasted alone with the two empty chairs and the massive silver, and, after penciling a note ac-knowledging my obligations, called for the horses and set forth once m

The compass directions were probably quite correct, but toward midday a heavy pampero swept the plains for an hour, and in muffling up my face with my coat to protect it from the dust I must have dropped my compass. Anyhow, it was gone when the storm subsided, also the sun for the rest of the day, and a wagon track that we had been following, as well; and even the back hoofprints of our horses had been covered up. Result, our circling blindly and ending up at sundown within sight of that same confounded spookhouse. The thing sight of that same confounded spookhouse. The thing was a veritable Flying Dutchman, for whereas we had started west from it in the morning, at evening we wer approaching it from the east, almost from the same approaching it from the east, almost from the same point from which we had first picked it up. Luckily we had food in our saddlebags, and found a "soak" of fairly sweet water near at hand, for my boy was no more anxious than I was to probe again the depths of the unknown. To my kindly-meant suggestions that he should return to the house and buy, borrow or steal a compass, he returned a most emphatic negative. I fancy that his diagnosis of "muy loco" was the correct one, and that the dialogue to which I had listened had been a mere niece of ventrilonuism, probably unconscious, into the piece of ventriloquism, probably unconscious, into the habit of which the unfortunate man had fallen in the course of his strange and lonely existence

We got back to civilization by returning to the salt earsh, skirting it until our tracks appeared beyond the swath of the pampero, and then back-tracking along the trail we had made when we first set out. When we reached the site of the harvesters' camp, which the ma-quinista had called "forty miles from nowhere and still going," it was to find that it had proved so true to name as to be gone entirely. With wagon tracks to guide us, however, we had no difficulty in reaching the French colony, where I returned the boy and horses to their owner and journeyed back to the railroad on the top of the load of a big Argentine grain wagon.

There is nothing like an Argentine grain train anywhere else in the world, and the sight of one on the move is alone worth a trip to the pampa. They are spe-cially designed for this country, and could be used in no other. One of them would be far too wide to pass through an English lane, far too long to turn an ordinary cross-roads corner in the States, and far too heavy to be used in any country where horses were not at bedrock prices. A good-sized wagon will be from forty to fifty feet long and from twelve to fifteen feet wide. Its hind wheels will be from twelve to fourteen feet high, and the driver's seat twenty feet, and more, from the ground. The borses used appear innumerable, and actually at times run above two and three score. They are driven either by the "jerk-line" system, common in Southern California and the San Joaquin Valley, or by reins run out to the leading pair. The capacity of one of these vehicles is enormous, and the general rule of "a wagon load makes a carload" will not often be found amiss. The principal idea of so large a wagon is to have something that will not be engulfed by the mud or dust of the bottomless roads of the pampas, but it also has its economic advantages in a country where men are scarce and horses plentiful.

The gaucho of the pampas is the counterpart of our cowboy of the plains, and the boundary-rider of the Australian "back blocks," and he is in many ways quite as attractive a character as either of his brothers. His worst fault seems to be his extreme carelessness in regard to the lives of those around him, but as he is equally careless of his own I cannot see where this can logically be held against him. As a handler of stock he is possibly the peer of a Queensland drover, but is certainly not to be mentioned in the same breath with a Texas, Arizona or Montana cowboy, nor with the best of Mexican vaqueros. I had arrived at this conclusion were said to be expert gauchos working out at a round-up; hence I was the more pleased when, not long ago, a bunch of half a dozen Texas cowboys came to this country on an exhibition tour and demonstrated to the satisfaction of everybody that, both in method and ex-ecution, in the handling of cattle and horses, the North American is far superior to the South American.

I say demonstrated to the satisfaction of everybody; as a matter of fact it was to the extreme dissatisfac tion of every one but the Anglo-Saxons. The average Argentine is quite lacking in anything resembling a sporting instinct, and he took it very hard when he his representatives so completely outclassed in a kind of work he had fondly imagined in his ignorance that they were supreme. At no branch of their work did the cowboys not make the gauchos appear fairly ludicrous in comparison. In roping and tying, and at breaking and riding untamed steers, horses and mules, the of the Argentines and Uruguayans, clumsy and slow. A cowboy would rope and tie a steer in from thirty to forty seconds, so deftly that it could be released by a single pull, where the gaucho would spend five minutes smoth ering the animal in a coll of rope, from which a surgi-cal operation was usually required to release it. Buenos Ayreans found the dose a hard one to swallow, but the best of them finally got it down and admitted that their men were outclassed at their own game. The English papers stood up manfully for the worthy Texan visitors race pride, no doubt-but the Argentine sheets were obdurate to the last, continuing to doggedly insist that obdurate to the last, continued the competitions.

"OLD MASTERS" TO ORDER.

The market at present is flooded with "old masters both genuine and "faked."

A well-known art dealer propounds a curious theory to account for the large supply of "old masters." "Many ancient families, whose aim in life is to raise money and yet present to the world an exterior of pros-perity, have borrowed a leaf from the book of the society lady." he said to an Express representative yesterday.

"The society lady has her jewels copied in paste with such skill that the five-guinea necklace is still supposed to represent many thousands of pounds.

"In many historic houses the priceless Rubens or Velasques is only a clever imitation. The original has found its way into the hands of the dealers, and then becomes the property of a right houses are affected when the property of a right houses are five to the property of a right houses. comes the property of a rich American who can afford to pay a long price.

re is more of this traffic at the present time than is realized by the general public."

Artists add their testimony to the prevalence of the system of faking "old masters."

"There are endless 'old master' factories on the continent," said one yesterday. "Three or four artists are employed at a weekly wage. Their work is to turn out pictures for unscrupulous dealers.

'A number of artists who are clever workmen, but find ossible to command a sale for their pictures, de velop into copyists.

"They go to the Louvre, or the famous collections at Antwerp, Berlin, Florence, and Munich, and by availing themselves of the advantages for students they rapidly acquire the brush technique and peculiarities of color and draughtsmanship of the artists they wish to imitate.

"These copies are then taken back to their studios, and entirely new pictures are invented, with all the feeling and style of the 'old masters.'

These copyists demand prices from £50 to £200 for their work, according to the size of the copy and the reputation of the artist.

"There are men on the continent who make a specialty of different 'masters." Even in England, I believe, there are many surreptitious Turners now being painted.

"The methods of inducing an appearance of age to deceive the unsuspecting purchaser are very ingenious.

"The pictures are painted in low colors, and a peculiar varnish is used to produce the network of cracks which appeals to the novice.

The pictures are then fixed in recesses, built in the lues of a wide chimney, and are left until they are begrimed and discolored.

The real experts know. They will not tell their secrets; but in the same way as the expert can tell genu-ine Chippendale furniture by passing his hand over the woodwork, so the picture expert can detect a fraudulent

THE FLIGHT OF TIME.

Mr. Justice Brewer of the United States Supreme Court, in lecturing to his law class at the George Washington University, told the following story:

"I knew of a case once where two darkies swapped mules. One of them was an old hand at the business, and in making the trade he represented his mule to be seven years old, and told of many good traits the animal had not. This was in February. About two months later the other darky began to realize that he had been victimized in the bargain and that the beast was fully twelve years old. So he decided to go back and tell the swindler he had fied to him about the animal. owing to it being the busy season of farming, he was not able to go until about the middle of June. He finally did representations about the mule.

"You say," said the other fellow, "dat when you got de mule in February he was seven years old, and now it's June and he's twelve years old?"

"Yes, I do!" was the angry response "Well, sah, time sure do fly."-[American Spectator.

The New China.

HOW CHINESE STUDENTS VIEW THE CONDITIONS OF TODAY.

By a Special Contributor.

T is seldom that the Chinese standpoint, in any of the many oriental discussions that have arisen in Amer-Lican publications, has been presented by the Chinese themselves. Under the direction of a young Chinese student by the name of Shin Yien Luther McLean Jee, how-ever, who is a senior in the University of California, a series of articles were prepared by Mr. Jee and other Chinese, which shed considerable light upon the present unrest which seems to be prevalent in China, in regard to the educational reform among the Chinese. The publication for which these articles was intended, the university students' "Blue and Gold," was entirely destroyed by the San Francisco fire, except proof sheets of the series of articles referred to. This is therefore the first time that they have been given to the public. They consist of an article on "Chinese Students in American Universities," by Mr. Jee; a discussion of what the oriental department of the University of California is doing to prepare young Americans for work in China, by Prof. John Fryer, Agassiz professor of oriental languages in that institution, and for many years an instructor in Chinese colleges; an account of "The Educational Outlook in China," by Fong F. Sec, a California graduate, and a final article by another Chinese, Chee Soo Lowe, who is this year a graduate of the university, on the subject of "Engineers for China."

Fong F. Sec says: "A keen observer of oriental af-fairs recently stated that the educational reform that is going on in China is greater in magnitude than either the adoption of Christianity by Europe, America and Australia or the rise of Buddhism and its subsequent spread throughout Asia; for it will not only affect the spread throughout Asia; for it will not only ance and 400,000,000 Chinese, but will react upon Europe and America. A few years ago the problem that confronted the well-wishers of China was how to teach a people who were so conceited and self-sufficient that they thought they had nothing to learn from the west. The problem they had nothing to learn from the west. The problem of today is how to pass from the old into the new learning with the least friction. Modern education is the key that unlocks the Chinese heart and intellect today.

"Stated briefly, the Chinese government alms, in the course of time, to have a new system of education that will correspond to the system which exists in the United States with its elementary schools, high schools and universities, with a great national university at Peking. Along with this programme, attention is to be given to the normal, the industrial and technical and the military and naval schools. This will take time; and the task is

"There is no more encouraging sign than that such in-fluential viceroys as Chang Chi-tung and Yuan Shi-kai should take the lead in sending students abroad to be educated, in carrying out this national programme. Each day brings fresh confirmation of the government's sincerity in introducing changes. Temples are now being turned into schools. The latest and most radical change is the complete abolition of the antiquated com-

"As the new schools are being established, the chief difficulty has been to get qualified teachers for instructors. The first group of students sent out to America, Europe and Japan are being summoned home by the government to take the initiative. But what are they, compared with the greatness of the work to be done? So the pared with the greatness of the work to be done? So the Chinese government has no recourse but to turn to the

'At the invitation of the Chinese government, a number of Japanese educators have gone to China and are doing good work. Now that peace has come to the Ori-ent, the Japanese will turn their attention to the edu-cational conquest of China. It is well that, in this time of need, the Chinese command the sympathy of the Japa-nese so powerfully. The Japanese will be bound to play an important part in this work. Their teachers receive five or six times more pay in the Chinese schools than in the schools of Japan. They can adapt themselves to conditions of life in China more easily than a white man; besides, their reading knowledge of Chinese gives then an advantage, although their pronunciation of English is very poor. To learn from them is to learn at secondhand. Moreover, Japan herself still looks to the west for teachers. For these reasons a reaction has set in, and there has been a falling off in the number of students who flock to Japan in quest of new learning.

"China has already shown a disposition to follow the example of Japan in dispensing with the services of forestoners."

The is premature. No doubt such unfortunate.

eigners. This is premature. No doubt such unfortunate occurrences as her Hangkow-Canton Railroad experience with the west have engendered this spirit. However, in face of the herculean undertaking before them, the leaders will have to see the necessity of accepting aid from foreigners for some time to come. Though she will be obliged to do so, yet her experiences with western nations during the last hundred years have given birth to a national spirit, characterized by a conscious self-independence and less of a disposition to a passive acquiescence to the dictates of the west. In matters educational as well as the development of her material resources more and more will she, while making use of her for eigners, endeavor to control her own destiny.

Some people are inclined to censure the Chinese for this tendency, and infer that there is no future for American energy in China. Interpreted, this national temper means "China for the Chinese," which is identical with the principle, "America for Americans. tarch, long ago, said that 'it is well to go for a light to another man's fire, but not to tarry by it, instead of kindling a torch of one's own.' This was the spirit that dominated the pioneers of America, with the self-inde-pendence and capacity for initiative, which characterize the Yankee of today as the outcome. If these qualities are as admirable in an American, they are likewise admirable in a Chinese

MATICATORIO

"One of the encouraging signs of the times is the number of Chinese students who come to the United States; it is also a healthy sign that Uncle Sam is learning to distinguish a Chinese gentleman from a coolle, and the Chinese students are beginning to receive civil treatment at the hands of the immigration officials. Who is likely to be in deeper sympathy with China's efforts to-ward reaching a higher and nobler life than the emancipator of the negro, the champion of Cuba, the school-master of the Filipino? California, the gateway to the Orient, is destined to have an important share in this work. China is a land of opportunities. It is safe to say that the Chinese students who are toiling obscurely in American universities, will, many of them, be the leaders of new China in a few years. What will be more leaders of new China in a few years. What will be more natural than that they should direct the future students of China to their alma maters, where they, themselves, had drunk from the fountain o fknowledge?

"Opportunities in China? The air is electric with opportunities. The situation is full of thrilling interest. It is estimated that 1,500,000 Chinese students present elves for the examinations for the B.A. degree nually. By virtue of their number they constitute one-fourth of the students of the entire world. Impressive is the thought that one-fourth of the world's students are seeking light, with their faces turned toward the west, Long, long has been the midnight; but the refulgent rays from the torch of modern learning are kissing the lofty mountain peaks and bathing the teeming plains of the land of Confucius, and 400,000,000 of Celestials are striking their tents for the morning march.

"One of the writer's pleasantest memories of his un-dergraduate days in California was the privilege he enjoyed in knowing the university men and women who are looking forward to commercial, diplomatic, educational and missionary relations in China. We want many more of you to come. We want you to come, not for the sordid desire for exploitation, but in the disinterested and friendly spirit to help usher in China's rennaissance. In doing so, you will exemplify in your lives the broad humanity which is so beautifully expressed by one of your American poets:

"'Where'er a human spirit strives After a life more true and fair, There is the true man's birthplace grand; His is a world-wide fatherland!"

Engineers for China.

Writing of the engineers of China, Chee Soo Lowe

B. S., says:

"The Chinese people throughout the whole empire appreciate the value of a scientific knowledge. They unpreciate the value of a scientific knowledge. They unpreciate the value of a scientific knowledge. By lerstand that it "explains" the natural phenomer the diffusion of fragmentary truths among the millions of that great country throughout the common schools and current magazines on the 'explanations' of the natua, the dark cloud of superstition, which h long checked the progress of the race, is breaking and is rapidly floating away. Schools in which western ideas and modern sciences are taught, are looming up all over the country; particularly in the coast provinces.

"The imperial government is making every inducement to the Chinese who have graduated from recognized col-leges to return to China. The provincial governments are liberally supporting students to study in America. Japan and Europe. The recent abolition of antiquated and stereotyped forms of essays from the imperial competitive examination is the most improtant step toward reform. The well-disciplined and brilliant minds will not longer crave for official ranks alone as their goal, but will turn their attention to the progress of the world.

"The Chinese have long known of the abundant wealth which is buried in their land. They have conducted metallurgical operations, on a small scale for centuries back, and this fact may be proved, for instance, by their beautiful work in old bronze. They have all kinds of minerals there, and if the mines could be opened and conducted on a modern, scientific basis, they would, in a short while, turn out a surprisingly large cutout of both short while, turn out a surprisingly large output of both precious and base metals. In the southern half of Shansi, and in the portion of Honan, north of the Yellow River, an area of over 25,000 square miles, lie coal beds and iron deposits—the largest coal beds known in the world, and the richest iron deposits known in the empire. Besides these, are thousands of other depo untouched and unknown.

"Although the Chinese realized what they had, their ethod has been entirely too crude to extract these minerals or metals with sufficient rapidity to be commer-cially profitable. With a view toward improvements along this line the Chinese government made concessions to syndicates which might be composed partly or wholly of foreigners to open mines and to construct and con-duct railroads. This was done to encourage the people to develop mines and to construct railways strictly on mod-ern methods. But before long the foreign element of syndicates exhibited the strong tendency of whole "grabbing." They insisted upon having the original agreement modified and remodified, sometimes through diplomatic influences, but more often through fectly satisfied. And it is a singular fact that these m fications have been invariably of betterment to the syn-dicates and detriment to China. There seemed to be no end to this sort of thing, so that now the Chin ernment and people have finally come to the positive conclusion of granting no further concessions to concerns in any way connected with foreigners.

To preserve the integrity of China, the construction of railroads and the development of mines must be car-ried on. Who are to assume these undertakings? this grave responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the Chinese engineers. The future destiny of the pends upon the earnestness of the Chin

Louisa's Young Man.

HE WINS HER CONFIDENCE AND TEACHES HER A LESSON.

From Pall Mall Gazette.

OUISA strolled disconsolately along the "Monkeys" Parade.". She was supposed to be at chapel-and she was half sorry now she wasn't. "How glad she had been when the sun came out and she could safely put on all the fine things she had bought on "Bargain Day!" Not a blouse she met was a patch on hera; she had a real dead bird in her hat; and, though "extra smart toes" dead bird in her hat; and, though "extra smart toes" looked nicer than they felt, that wasn't where the shoe pinched just now. That cat of a Sally Mould! To make her hurry over the washing-up (which meant a row with the missus when she got back)—to be punctual to the minute—and then to be cut like this! Suppose Sally had picked up a young man (and much good might he do her!) was that any reason for passing people by as if they were dirt? they were dirt?

Louisa had come up from an Essex village nine months efore. She blushed to think of the stupid country girl who had agreed to wear a red ribbon on her arm so that her missus might know her at the station! But now, thanks to Sajly and the others, she had learned a thing or two. Only last Sunday her master's old uncle had all but kissed her at the door in mistake for Miss Alice; and, let them laugh as much as they liked in the draw-ing-room, it was no bad compliment, anyway. It was a wonder the missus didn't faint—she, who could hardly without coming out with a lecture on the dangers of speaking to strange young men! But young men had no terrors for her. She could hold her own with any of them. She only wished she had the chance. . . . .

"Good afternoon, Miss!" a suave voice startled her. "Good afternoon," she responded guardedly. "I don't mber as we've met before."

ed A1, but it didn't do to make yourself too That was the first law of the "Monkeys' Parade." But that much she had known even before she came to

"Beg pardon," he went on, unabashed; "I thought you was a lady I used to know down Enfield way."

"Get out!" retorted Louisa, ambiguously.

"I must 'ave 'ad dust in my eyes," he murmured ad-miringly; and the subtle flattery won her heart.

"Try the chemist down the street," she temporized. He's jolly good at that sort o' thing."

He tapped the pavement with his stick like a blind man, and begged her to lead him there at once. She burst out laughing, and they walked along together. They passed the chemist's without even noticing that it was shut. They strolled into the pretty northern park side by side, and strolled out of it again arm-in-arm. They had great fun in choosing a place for tea, and, once inside, in getting the best value for their money. He went so far as to offer to pay her share, which made her ask him what he took her for; she showed her purse, with her new month's wages, which made him reply: "For a princess in disguise!" It was long before she left off giggling at this wittlelsm, and could get on with the story of how her friend Sally had trodden on the carpet sweeper in the dark and taken it for a burglar and alarmed all the neighborhood. In return, he told her of his prospects and his lonesomeness, and how he had taken a fancy to her at first sight. And before they parted at the corner of her street, on the stroke of 9, they had learned many more interesting things about each other

On the following evening Louisa contrived to slip out and let Sally know what a good turn she had done her by her shabby trick. His name was Henry Harmer, and he was a traveler by trade, and he was just turned 26. And he was going to meet her again on her evening out, and they were going to the Empire (first house) toand he had promised to give her a surprise. Sally listened enviously (the new half-crown she had changed for her young man had proved by daylight to be a bad one.) and hinted darkly she believed all men were Louisa complacently much of a muchness. But thought herself of his gentlemanly manners and his fair The splendid results which must accrue "raise a fiver any day of the week," and gave her friend clearly to understand she had no more need of her advice than of her company.

Forty-eight hours later the pair of lovers were com fortably seated in the gallery of the local Empire and spending a pleasant evening. Louisa duly marveled at spending a pleasant evening. Louisa duly marveled at the conjurer, shuddered at the acrobats, thrilled at the battle scene, and roared at the antics of the funny man. This last brought down the house by winding up his watch (which he always kept twenty-four hours fast to make sure of catching his train) and producing a sound like stage thunder. "Spring's broke!" he cried inanely. "Like me!" Louisa laughed until the tears came into

"'Ow'd you like to 'ave a watch like that?" whispered Henry.

"Offer me one, and then you'll see!" she replied mischievously.

"Dare me?" He took a small case from his pocket.

Guess what's inside." For all answer she snatched it from his hand. "Oh-h!" she cried. For it contained the daintiest little gold watch she had ever dreamt of!

The funny man hit his friend on the bead with a broomstick, but Louisa didn't even laugh.

Whose is it?" she cried breathlessly.

"Yours, if you like!" murmured Henry gently.

She shook his arm off her waist angrily. Did he mean to say it wasn't real, after all? "Real eighteen-carat," he smiled, "jeweled in five holes, warranted for ten years, Bank of England time."

"And—a present for me?" she eyed him incredulously. "Did you ever 'ear of 'Awkins and Spender?" he asked. Louisa nodded expectantly. Who hadn't heard of Hawkins and Spender? The great firm that threw bills under the street door every other day, offering to s pply you with your heart's desire on the shortest notice, and the longest credit. "That 'appens to be my concern," he continued proudly, "an' when you was so anxious about the time on Sunday it come upon me like a flash that the only thing wantin' to make you equal to the tip-toppest lady e land was a nice gold watch. So I kidded the guv'nor I'd spotted a customer for one, an' 'e picks me out st we 'ad in the place!"

"But you'll have to give it back!" she cried, dis-

He laughed encouragingly. "Yes, in three months, in six months. An' then I can change it for another—o who knows? Why, they'll trust me with any amount. he bragged, "so long as I show 'em a receipt.

Louisa was much touched by this proof of ecufidence. Louisa was much touched by this proof of confidence. Such a watch as this, she confessed over the hurried chocolate and cakes after the performance, she had longed to wear ever since she was a little girl. And Sally, with her twopenny-ha'penny silver one, would be crying her eyes out for jealousy. But missus would be wondering where she got it, she bethought uneasily.

'er you bought it," he suggested boldly. "And where did I get the money from, Mr. Clever?" she laughed pertly. "She'll go counting over all her

'Say you're paying off a shilling a week," he chuckled. "Look 'ere, I'm down this way Fridays, collectin'—s'pose I call in and ask for the installments?"

It was amazingly artful of him, thought Louisa. He produced a fountain pen, and she signed the receipt; and when they parted they were still laughing at his little plot for taking in the old lady and seeing each other on Fridays.

It was rather silly of him, though, to forget her warning and come round to the front door instead of the For her missus, of course, was down on them like hot bricks, and it was lucky Henry played his part so well. He winked wickedly at her as she gravely handed over her shilling, and solemnly wrote out a receipt on one of his firm's forms. All he had the chance to whis-per was his fear that he might be unable to see her until the following week. And all her missus's comment was that she was an extravagant little fool.

But Louisa didn't mind, for she trod on air. That is, until the next Friday, when a shabby-looking stranger called from Hawkins and Spender for the "installment due!" Henry's whereabouts, he vouchsafed, irascibly, weren't his business—which was to call where he was told. From that day Hawkins and Spender were the bane of her life. After many wretched weeks she offered to return the watch to Mr. Harmer, if he'd call for it himself. The collector took this as a personal insult, and appealed to her missus "to save unpleasantness." He produced her written promise to pay a shilling a week for a hundred weeks! Poor Louisa protested in vain she had signed nothing but a "receipt;" her scrupulous mistress declared she'd either have to keep h or lose her place. Louisa sullenly acquiesced, still with a faint hope all might yet be well; until the sight of Henry, arm-in-arm with another girl on the "Monkeys' With some difficulty she drove her to despair. pawned the loathed watch for half a sovereign, stealthily made a bundle of her best belongings, and took the next train to her Essex home.

The Sea Serpent.

NATURALISTS OF REPUTE ARE FAST COMING TO BELEIVE IN IT.

By a Special Contributor.

NB sign of the times is the increasing number of well-credited naturalists willing to openly admit-the possibility of the "sea serpent." None of this category does but scoff, however, at the old notion that the monster is a "serpent" in our understanding of the In substance, what they do believe is that som of the many "sea serpents" reported by travelers of high repute and abstemious comportment may be real, living, colossal, terrifying monsters of the deep—survivors of past geologic ages. "Other species have survived these same ages, so why not these?" ask our honest and proressive savants.

That our sea serpent is none other than the great suglodon of old is the most popular of these theories.

during the chalk-forming epoch, when the interior ba-sin of this continent was occupied by a sea above whose waters the Rocky Mountains were beginning to emerge. Six species have been found in New Jersey alone.

Even more terrible was the elasmosaur, the most colossal of those sea lizards. It had a whale-like body, long and flexible neck, short paddles, serpent-like head and tall, and veretebrae nearly as large as those of the

And then there is the terrible plesiosaur, a few of whose kind may still survive to terrify mariners. It is whose kind may still survive to terrify mariners. It is held that it is just as possible for the plesiosaur to survive as for some of our sharks, which dated back to the same geologic period. This huge marine lizard, which fed on fishes, had combined with its huge lizard body the elongated, tapering neck of a monstrous duck, the flat head of a serpent, teeth in distinct sockets, the paddles of a turtle and a comparatively short tail. Some suppose that the largest specimens were 100 feet long and had eyes of the size of a town clock, or three feet in diameter. Mr. Lucas has the story of the captain of the

The zeuglodon, an ancient mammal related to our modern seals, is generally supposed to have remained extinct since long before man's advent upon earth. Yet some animals whose bones are found together with those of this creature, and which therefore lived at the same time, are still surviving and flourishing upon earth today notably the Australian ceratodus and our own gar pike. It these two have survived the stress of time, why not, then, at least a few zeuglodons?

This ancient sea serpent answering to all important specifications of the smodern monster, was sometimes seventy feet long and eight feet in greatest diameter. It had an enormously long tail, propelling it probably from twenty to thirty miles an hour, and a proportionately small, painted head four or five feet long. Its long neck could be reared some twenty or twenty-five feet out of the sea when it wished to take a comprehensive view of its surroundings, and alongside this neck were arranged in pairs a number of large, bony, scale-like plates. It carried in front two powerful swimming flippers, not unlike those of the fur seal.

Its jaws were armed with grasping and cutting teeth,

Its jaws were armed with grasping and cutting teeth, and it seems to have feroclously preyed upon other animals. The species was once numerous in the shallows of the old seas of southern Europe and of the Gulf of Mexico, its bones being found now and then scattered along our southern coasts. It has been called the "whale-like king of lizards," yet was in reality a mammal, and not a reptile. It is generally thought to have been an ancestor of the whale, although some natural-ists claim that it died without issue. The best skeleton of a seuglodon known to the scientific world was obago from our southern seaboard. Mixed with these bones were the shell of a turtle three feet long and part of the backbone of a water snake which in life had measured twenty-five feet from head to tail. Frederick A. Lucas, former curator of zoölogy in the National Mu-Lucas, former curator of zoölogy in the National Museum, but now director of the museum of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and who admits that he "inclines rather to belief than to unbelief in the monster"—the sea serpent—says that the zeuglodon corresponds perfectly to the sea serpents of popular tradition. But he adds that no one can deny that with the zeuglodon there may yet survive in the depths of the ocean such monsters as the ichthyosaur, plesiosaur, mosasaur or hadrosaur. Other naturalists—no less than Prof. Louis Agassiz and Prof. Spencer Bayard, former secretary of the Smithsonian Institution—have admitted this possithe Smithsonian Institution—have admitted this possi-

Or Perhaps the Awful Mosasaur.

That the feroclous mosas aur still lurks in the unfathomed caves of the sea is a theory in support of the "sea serpent" probably next in popularity to that concerning

The mosasaur was a fierce, carnivorous eel-like lizard, forty feet long, with flat and pointed head and jaws armed with large and flerce teeth, the lower jaw having nt of cartilege, like that of the modern ser peat, by which it could open its mouth to an enormous extent. The vast tail was flat and deep, like that of a colossal eel, and with this it whipped through the water at tremendous speed, accelerated also by its pair of swimming paddles. From snout to tail it was covered with scales of an almost impervious armor. Ten species inhabited the United States millions of years ago,

British ship Fly, who, while becalmed in the Gulf of California, in twelve fathoms of remarkably clear water, a few years ago, saw crawling over the bottom an extraordinary lizard-like animal, with long serpent-like down into the sea and devoured. California, in twelve fathoms of remarkably clear water, a few years ago, saw crawling over the bottom an extraordinary lizard-like animal, with long serpent-like neck, short tail, and four flippers like those of a turtle. Mr. Lucas regards it as remarkable that this skipper, who doubtless had never heard of a plesiosaur, thus describe one with a maxing accuracy, both as to form and describe one with amazing accuracy, both as to form and probable habit. The plesiosaur had a companion and relative—another of those possible "sea serpents" of today—the ichthyosaur, whose name we remember as an old standby at spelling bees when we were children.

Perhaps 'Tis the Ichthyosaur.

This ichthyosaur, or fish lizard, was a great creature, often forty feet long, clearly built for speed, with a powerful vertical tail, four paddles and high-back fin. In general, it might be called a great lizard with a fish's tail and fin and the swimming paddles of a turtle. Its tremendous alligator-like laws were armed with great tail and in and the swimming paddles of a turtle. Its tremendous alligator-like jaws were armed with great teet for reading and tearing. With the exception of the mosasaur, it was the most feroclous and terrible marine reptile of its day. It fed on fishes, sometimes near the shore, but usually it frequented the deeper ocean in pursuit of its prey. It dived to great depths, and is supposed to have had eyes of telescopic power.
these eyes were a foot in diameter, and their chief use seems to have hear to emple the creature to see in the seems to have been to enable the creature to see in the n of the ocean depths.

"Who can say with certainty that the ferocious isch-thyosaur or that other huge fish-eating lizard, the plesiosaur, may not lurk even now in the dark, unfathomed caves of the sea?" asked Director Lucas.

Another gigantic reptile inhabiting the seas in that chalk-forming epoch was the hadrosaur. It was thirty feet long as it swam, stood twenty feet in height as it waded, kangaroo fashion, on its hind legs, through the ocean shallows. It was not carniver-ous, like its fellow-lizards above mentioned, but browsed upon seaweeds. With its great jaws, shaped like a pair of salad spoons, it picked up marine growf in huge mouthfuls, grinding it with its 2000 teeth. As sociated with these reptiles was the laelaps, perhaps the

This line of defense was a great comfort to Tung How.

This line or defense was a great comfort to taug flow.

He began upon it at the same time that he began to prepare his formula, and he considered it a good omen because he had completed them both upon the same day.

The extreme youth of Ye Se was all that prevented

Chong Loo from giving him the promise of the position as soon as Che-le had been apprehended by the government officials. In anticipation of that event, Ye cultivated a look of dignified maturity, and Tung proudly went around the courts and alleys with the outside of his queue plentifully sprinkled with gray.

At length the news was passed that a certain "Glis-cum," a fat-paunched spy of great cunning, was about to make a visitation. Thereupon those who had no to make a visitation. Thereupon those who had no chak-che and were not ready to go home, went into hiding: Che-le packed his bundle, and Ye Se and Tung How made ready for the contest. It was evening when the spy was expected; but it was only a little past noon when his portly shadow darkened the passageway of the Seven Steps, which led to the Court of Honorable Men.

In the deep silence which then fell upon the empty court, Tung issued from the tenement, and turned into the passageway of the Cooling Breeze. He had a chakehe, and did not fear the spy; but at such a time it was better not to meet him. Once through the passageway, he disappeared in the first open doorway, scuttled upstairs, and got out upon the roof. None questioned him; without doubt he was going to carry aid and comfort to some one in hiding. some one in hiding.

The roof upon which he was adjoined that of Win Gee's establishment. Win's kitchen, however, was of but one story; and Tung clambered from roof to roof until he stood on a two-story building overlooking this kitchen of Win Gee. There, partly sheltered by a bamboo matting the youth Ve Se carried on his work and Tung ting, the youth Ye Se carried on his work, and Tung looked down into the laboratory of his rival.

Haai! Joy of joys! Triumph of triumphs! Ye Se was absent; a pot sat over a tiny charcoal fire, and in it simmered some prentice effort in the sublime science. All was as it should be for the successful discouragement

Cautiously Tung How took from beneath his blouse a bladderful of some semi-liquid substance, and by means of a string let it down until it hung directly above the caldron. Presently the heat had the desired effect; the bladder cracked, and the contents cozed out and mingled with the substance in the pot.

Tung How stuffed the empty skin out of sight, slund over the roofs until he reached another open scuttle, hastened down to the ground and back to his room in the tenement. There he scated himself at the window, to await the news of the accident. Until Ye Se came to stir the fire, the mixture would remain harmless en with an increase of heat would come the catastrophe. Hardly had he settled himself at his post, when two passageway of the Seven Steps. This worried the Honorable Tung How; he had not counted upon foreign devils sharing Ye Se's fate. When the elements in that pot did their duty, they would sink to the roof of Win Gee's kitchen and roll off like sluggish syrup into the passage way below. They would he no respective of person way below. They would be no respecters of person, though their peculiar virtues would be somewhat impaired before the foreign devils had been enveloped. Al-ya! those foreign officials always made such triumphant trouble in such cases. The spy was out of danger; he had gone to work in another part of the settlement.

The two men and the dog, however, showed no signs of an early departure. The one who held the dog squatted against Win Gee's wall, while his companion stepped into the court and began a series of shrill whistles.

In Chinatown there are two kinds of dogs; these re emble the two kinds of men who dwell there. One kind of dog and man is truculent; they are renegades and are bitter against those of white skin. Dogs of this kind are kept to guard the premises; the men help to formulate and execute such of those wretched deeds that for many reasons rascals of the yellow race are unable to carry

The other dogs and men are the most miserable of outcasts. They have fallen down hill so fast and far that they have rolled over the ledge of caste, and have sunk into the pitiful depths of Chinatown's degradation. They shrink from a white face and cringe before a yelone. The dogs are pets of the children, and are well fed; the men, between gratuitous oplum dreams, or debauches with that coloriess, brandy-like liquor known as wol-quoi-lo, carry coal and make themselves otherless useless.

Tung How knew at once that the two foreigners below him were in search of one of the second class of dogs. Occasionally other foreigners came thus, to find an outcast dog against which to pit their own. mals with the square jaws and clipped ears and tail, always killed the spiritless curs; and thereby were given greater courage to battle with their own kind.

Ai-ya! now both men were sitting in the passage; they were determined to wait until the needed attention had been bestowed upon that fire! He hurried down the tenthe court.

One of the foreigners came out of the passage and re-sumed the whistle. This time it was answered by a tenbark from beneath a step; and there cam view the brown muzzle of the pet of the youngest in the

If the strangers saw the dog, they could never be induced to go away.

They had seen him; one of them dragged the bulldog to the street end of the passage, while the other enticed the victim into the frap. In a moment the brown dog was in the toils, with a foreign devil before and behind him. The buildog made a frantic tug at his chain, and finding himself free, plunged down the passage.

Then there was a premonitory sizzle from the roof. Tung How squealed with horror and was answered by a yell of surprise from Ye Se, as that youth tossed the pot and its contents down into the passage. It fell directly in front of the buildog.

What followed could not properly be called an explo sion. The pot's mouth seemed to gasp, then give a giant sigh, and a heavy, brown vapor sluggishly flowed through the passage. The buildog dropped dead in his tracks, the man at the street end choked and dropped, and the one in the court rolled about in agony upon the pave-ment. The brown dog leaped over the edge of the baneful cloud into the pure air, and ran yelping into the tene

And the odor, the indescribable, palpable stench, that clung to the stones! Even Tung How, born and brought up in Canton, and an heirophant of Chinese alchemy besides, could not endure it! In a moment the vapor, van-ished; but the smell drifted out into the atreet, where some impetuous foreign devil immediately sent in a call for the fire department and the ambulance. The latter carried the dog's owners to the hospital.

The spy found himself unable to continue his quest in the Court of Honorable Men, although he went in long enough to capture Che-le Quong. As Che-le, with a smile upon his face, and the spy, with a handkerchief upon his, left the court, Chong Loo joined a group gathered around Ye Se, listening to a recital of the affair,

"Truly it was a propitious moment when I came out upon the roof," Ye Se concluded. "But an odd half-secupon the roof," Ye Se concluded. "But an odd half-second more and the youngest of the household of Chong would have had no dog of excellent reputation. It was one of my simplest preparations—a little matter for the discouragement of enmity—yet it served as well as a product of my best skill could have done. I go back to my work now; may all have a prosperous evening!"

"Wait!" cried Chong Loo. "Wait but an odd halfminute! I wish you to bonor my miserable lottery, by distributing tickets in place of the affable Che-le Quong.
Be assured that it will in no way interfere with your

Be assured that it will in no way interfere with your and most celestially-endowed pursuit."

Ye Se stopped to consider the matter. "My studies are most engrossing," he said at length, "and they require much time. Yet do not despair, honorable man, I shall assist you. Now," and he fixedly gazed at Tung How, "I go to make another mixture for the discoura

Argument with Hawkins is futile. I saved my breath on the chance of finding better use for it later on. Hawkins unlocked his little door, fished around in the machinery, and fastened the door again with a calm Simultaneously, the launch seemed to leap from the water in its anxiety to get ahead. For a few seconds it quivered from end to end. Then it settled down at a gait that actually made me gasp.

I am not positive that we made 100 knots to the hour, but I do know that I never traveled in an express train that hastened as did that poor launch when the Hawkins A. P. motor began to push it through the water.

An account of our trip down the Narrows and into the lower bay would be interesting, but extraneous. Haw-kins sat erect beside his infernal machine, looking like a cavalryman in the charge. I squatted in the cabin and watched things flash past.

The main point is that we reached the open water without smashing anything or smashing into anything. "Well, I think we may as well swing around," said Hawkins, glancing at his watch. "It's wonderful, the control I have over the launch now. Every bit of the steering gear is located in that steel dome, along with the motor, Griggs. Nothing at all exposed but this little wheel.

served, probably, that I set it a few m ago, so that the wind wouldn't blow us about, and haven't touched it since. Now note how we shall turn back."

Hawkins grasped his little wheel, puffed up his chest, and gave a tremendous twist.

And the wheel snapped off in Hawkins's hands! "Why-why-why-" he stuttered, in amazeme

"Why-why-why—" he stuttered, in amazement.
"Yes, now you've done it," I rapped out, savagely.
"How the dickens are we to get back?"
"There, Griggs, there," said Hawkins, "don't be so childishly impatient. I shall simply unlock this case again and control the steering gear from the inside. Certainly even you must be able to understand that."

"The calm superiority of his tone was maddening.
One or two of my sentiments defied restraint.
Heaven knows I didn't suppose it would make Hawkins nervous to hear them, but it did. His hands shook as he fumbled with the key of his steel box, and at a parallel hands and the steel hox.

"Well, Griggs, you've put us in a hole this time!" he

'You made me so nervous that I snapped that key off short in the lock!"
"What!" I shrieked.

"Yes, sir. The motor's locked up in there with fuel enough to keep her going for three months. I can't stop her or move the rudder without getting into the case, and nothing but dynamite would dent that case!"

"Then, Hawkins," I said, a terrible calm coming over me, "we shall have to go straight ahead now until we hit something or are blown up. Am I right?"

"Quite right," muttered Hawkins, defiantly. "And it's all your fault!"

I transfixed the inventor with a vindictive stare, until he abandoned the attempt at bravado and looked away. "We-we may blow back, you know," he said, vaguely, addressing the breez

"The chances of that being particularly favorable by reason of your having set your miserable rudder to correspond with the present wind?" I asked. "Can't we tear up the woodwork and contrive some sort of rudder?"

"We would," admitted Hawkins, "if it wasn't all riveted down with my own patent rivets, which can't be removed, once they're set."

Hawkins's rivets are really what they claim to be Only one consideration has delayed their universal adop-tion. They cost a trifle less than $1 apiece to manufacture and set.

But they stay where they are put, and I knew that if the launch's woodwork was held together by them, it wasn't likely to come apart much before Judgment Day.

"Real nice mess, isn't it, Hawkins?" I said. "It-might be worse,

"Far worse," I agreed. We might be wallowing helplessly around in those heaving billows, or a gale might be tiring itself all out in the effort to swamp us. But, as it is, we are merely careering gally over the sunlit waves at an unearthly speed. In a day or two, Hawkina, we shall sight the French coast, barring accidents, g

"By Jove, Griggs!" exclaimed the inventor, lighting up on the instant. "Do you know, I hadn't thought of that. Just let me see. Yes, my boy, at this rate we shall be in the Bay of Biscay Monday night or Tuesday morning at the latest. Think of it, Griggs! the fame! Think of-

I couldn't bear to think of it any longer. I knew that if I thought about it for another ten seconds I should hurl Hawkins into the sea and go to my own watery cave with murder on my hands.

The bow of the launch being the furthest possible point from its owner, I gathered up my overcoat, cigars and a sandwich, and crouched there, keeping out of the terrific wind as much as possible, watching for a possible el and munching the food with a growing wonder as to whether I should ever return to the happy home wherein ot was prepared.

There I sat until sunset, and it was the latest sunset I have ever observed. With dusk descending over the lonely ocean, I returned in silence to Hawkins.

He was in bounding spirits. He chattered incessantly about the trip, planned a lecture tour—"Across the Atlantic in Forty Hours"—formed a stock company to manufacture his motor, offered me the London agency at an incredible salary, and built a stately mansion just Central Park with his own portion of the proceeds.

Having babbled himself dry, Hawkins informed me that salt air invariably made him sleepy, and crawled into the cabin for slumber.

And he slept. It passed my understanding, but the man had such utter confidence in himself and his unintentional trip that he snored peacefully throughout the

They were doing it, there was no doubt about the matter. In five minutes we should be near enough to their

I dived to the stern to awaken Hawkins. He was already awake. He stood there, tousled and happy, sniff-ing the crisp air, and he had seen the approaching boat. "Got it ready?" he inquired, placidly "Got what ready?"

"Why, the message," exclaimed Hawkins, opening his eyes in astonishment. "We'll have to hustle with it, I

"Hawkins, what new idlocy is this?" I gasped. "Surely we're going to give that steamer a few lines to tell the world about our trip?"

Seconds passed before the full, terrible significance of his words filtered into my brain.

"Do you mean to say," I roared, "that you are not go-ing to swim for that boat?"

"Certainly I do mean to say it," he replied, stiffly.
"Let me have your fountain pen, Grigga."

I took one glance at the boat. I took another glance at Hawkins. Then I gripped him about the waist and threw my whole soul into the task of pitching him over-and strained and pulled and hauled at me, swearing fike a trooper the while. And neither of us budged an inch.

The cutter came nearer, nearer, always nearer. Thirty seconds more and we should shoot by it forever. The thought of losing this chance of rescue almost maddened

I had just gathered all my strength for one last heave, ddle of my back experienced the most excru clating pain it has ever known. Something seemed to lift me clear of the launch, with Hawkins in my arms; I heard a dull report from somewhere, and then we dropped together, right through the surface of the sparkling Atlantic ocean!

Hawkins was picked up first. When I came to the s face, two dark-skinned saliormen were dragging him in, struggling and cursing and pointing wildly toward the horizon, where his launch was careening away with the speed of the wind.

It was the French liner La France which had the honor of our rescue. She deposited us in New York on Wednesday morning.

Over the rest of this tale hover some painful memories. I am not a fighting man, but I am free to say that when my wife and Mrs. Hawkins delivered to me their joint opinion on broken promises, their sex alone saved them from personal damage.

It was upon me that the blame appeared to rest en-tirely. At least, Hawkins didn't come in for any of it at kins was busy in his workshop—perfecting something.

It seems that the motor, after all, was our salvation.

Hawkins says that some of the power must have dribbled out of the machine proper and blown the steel dome from its foundations.

Assuredly there was plenty of energy behind the thing when it struck me; I have darting pains in that portion of my anatomy every damp day.

The launch has quite as well.

Perhaps it has reached the open polar sea, and is but-ting itself into flinders against the ice cakes. Perhaps it is terrorizing some cannibal tribe in the southern oceans by inflicting dents on the shore line of their island.

Wherever the poor little boat may be, it contains eleven of my best cigars, the better part of a substantial meal, and, what is in my eyes of less importance, the sole existing example of what Hawkins still considers an idea, generator of power.

BOUGAINVILLEAS.

Answers to Numerous Inquiries Re-CEIVED.

By Ernest Braunton.

ANY inquiries come to this department concerning bougainvilleas, how many kinds, which is best, Where you can get them, how much frost they will stand, etc. To satisfy all these and at the same time set stand, etc. To satisfy all these and at the same time set at rest many doubts regarding these popular plants is the purpose of this article.

All bougainvilleas are more or less tender and thrive only in Southern California. Though a few are grown north of the Tehachepi it is only in favored spots, for they quickly perish in climates similar to that of Fresno and are also occasionally killed in parts of our southland subject to heavy frosts. They are fast growing vigorous climbers (properly shrubs) which bloom very profusely and are of easiest culture. Their flowers are small, light yellow, tubular blossoms, and what is generally known as blossoms are really modified colored leaves, known to the botanist as floral bracts.

There are but three valid species and a lingering sus-

There are but three valid species and a lingering sus-icion exists among botanists that there are but two. picion exists among botanists that there are but two. In horticultural practice, though, there are many, for the species have many varieties. The three species are all native to Brazil and belong to the order Nyctaginaceae of which order the common garden four-o'clock is a member, as well as our own native species, Mirabilis Californica. All are some shade closely bordering on magenta, the off colors being natural sports, which in horticulture, generally constitute a variety and often a separate species.

The three natural species and their varieties are: 1, Bongainvillea refulgens, which has no valreties and is itself suspected of being a variety of number three. 2, B. glabra and its variety Sanderiana; these two are the most common in Southern California. 3, B. spectabilis, which has larger bracts and is very variable in color. Gardeners and nurserymen have propagated one very fine colored sport which goes by the name of B. brasilenisis and is fairly well known in our section. B. spectabilis and its varieties were the first introduced to horticulture and the type was considered planted before the introduction of B. glabra, but on account of the few flowers compared with glabra was soon left behind in the race for popular favor, with the exception of its brickred sport, known to the botanist as variety lateritia of B. spectabilis, but to the nursery trade as B. lateritia. This latter plant, though many years in garden cul-

Red sport, known to the botanist as variety lateritia of B. spectabilis, but to the nursery trade as B. lateritia. This latter plant, though many years is garden culture, has baffled the ingenuity of nearly every gardener to propagate it, and is considered the most difficult of all plants to "strike" from cuttings. Bougainvilleas do not seed in this climate, and in Jamaica and other parts of the West Indies where it has flowered, the seeds from lateritia always produce plants of the undesirable magenta shades, so that the grower has no alternative but to reproduce this sport from cuttings. So difficult is this process that small plants have risen in value from $\frac{1}{2}$ just ten years ago to $\frac{1}{2}$ at the present time, with not one-tenth the number in the market that is called for. The magenta shades clash with, or "swear at" every other shade or color, so that they are becoming less popular each year. The brick-red lateritia seems to be particularly harmonious and of a very bright, pleasing shade of red. As a bloomer it is probably the most florriferous of any wall cover we have, and even at the high price of $\frac{1}{2}$ each they are eagerly sought out and purchased, though there are few on sale in this city at present. One lady at the flower show remarked that she thought the demand for this plant was largely created by reason of the magenta shades being so displeasing, but lateritia is certainly the finest vine that can be grown in practically frostless sections. in practically frostless sections.

Pruning Trees and Shrubs.

The proper pruning of trees and shrubs is an art understood by very few people, and it is unfortunate that so few gardeners understand this work. Some little pruning is needed each year, yet how few understand even how the limb of a tree should be cut off. When cut close to the trunk the wound soon heals over, but where an inch or more of stump is left it eventually causes a decrea of the trunk at that regist.

an inch or more of stump is left it eventually causes a decay of the trunk at that point.

Most gardeners prune shrubs "to give them shape," which results in an unnatural condition, lacking the artistic grace given by nature. Each tree and shrub has a characteristic appearance quite its own which man cannot improve upon by pruning. Then why prune at all? For many reasons. Along the roadside we do not wish the limbs of our shade trees to hang so low as to interfere with passage underneath. By a careful cutting away some of the foliage in the center of a tree, we but anticipate the pruning which nature will eventually do. In this way light and air are allowed to enter and our tree will grow more thrifty thereby. We cut out the dead wood because it is unsightly, getting rid of the surplus which nature has pruned for us. plus which nature has p

The Puzzling Aster Blight.

There are two important diseases either of which might be called "blight." One disease, which is variously referred to as "wilt" or "stem rot," results from the attack of a parasitic fungus, a fusarium. An early symptom of this disease is the changing of color in portions of the plant to a dull yellowish green, which is folwed by a blighted appearance, and later by a rotting of the stem. The restoration of attacked plants to a realthy condition is hopeless, and as the fungus persists for an indefinite period in the soil it should never again be used for the growing of asters. The cause of the "yellow blight," although long sought for, is still unknown. No parasitic organism has yet been found associated with it. The disease is not dependent upon soil conditions, nor is it necessary to refrain from growing asters in soil in which diseased plants have occurred.

The midget of the whole tree family is the Greenland birch. It is a perfect tree in every sense of that trm, and lives its allotted number of years from seventy-five to 130, just as other species of the great birch family do, al-though its height under the most favorable conditions seldom exceeds ten inches. Whole bluffs of the east and southeast coast of Greenland are covered with "thickets" of this diminutive species of woody plant, and in many places where the soil is uncommonly poor and frozen from eight to ten months a year a "forest" of these trees will flourish for half a century without growing to a height exceeding four inches.

Hawaiian Huckleberry.

On the island of Hawaii are great thickets of the ohelo, or Hawaiian huckleberry (Vaccinium reticulatum), which the natives consider sacred to Pele, the goddess which the natives consider sacred to Pele, the goddess who is supposed to preside over the famous crater of Kilaues, and which, together with white pigs and chickens, are thrown by them into the boiling red lake during an eruption to appease the wrath of the aggressive dame and thus cause the rivers of lava to cease flowing on their destructive course. These berries grow in clusters on low bushes right on the very brink of the brimstone beds, and are so numerous that a bushel may be easily gathered in half an hour. In appearance they somewhat resemble a cranberry, and the flavor is pleasantly suggestive of grapes. gestive of grapes.

No other garden flower has been more improved upon of late years than the dahlia. From the old stiff forms and dull colors have been evolved ever new and graceful varieties and dainty tints.

Introduced over 100 years ago, the dahlia speedily became a favorite. The form then was almost a perfect ball, and the more spherical and artificial it was, the higher it was prized. Gradually, however, it lost favor and was looked on as a coarse stiff flower of little value and seldom cultivated. Since the new cactus dahlia came this has all been changed. The old stiff forma have given way to loose, fantastic shapes. New irregu-lar and esthetic varieties now originated and being introduced have redeemed the dahlia and made it the most popular garden flower grown. Artistic Park Building.

We Americans are a fickle people, and are much inclined to change our fashions, not only in dress, but in more serious things. It is this desire for a change for the sake of change which has prevented the normal development of architecture and stunted the growth of every style in its early youth; but we are also quick to learn and adopt any new thing which is good.

The love of the beautiful has only recently begun to develop in this country and the taste of the people is in a formative state, and they are just beginning to realize that such an art as landscape gardening for the general

The architects have done much to improve the taste of the dwellers in cities; but only landscape gardening can reach the great mass of the nation and elevate their taste by teaching them to appreciate the charming things growing wild about them, and ultimately to ap-preciate everything that is beautiful in nature and art.

A heavy responsibility rests on the leaders in park building. They can check the vagaries and inanities which are creeping into the art of gardening and which unchecked, will prove its ruin and will have a far-reaching effect in giving the nation a false and perverted taste. They can correct its decadent tendencies and maintain the standard which entitles it to rank among the fine arts and which will lead to its highest develop-

Children's Playgrounds.

There is a considerable movement in this country for the establishment of playgrounds for children in all cities. Money is being contributed for the purpose, and for the first time in history, children's rights are to have a hearing. But the playgrounds already are falling into control of faddists, cranks and hysterical women who would furnish children a place to play not as they want to play, but according to some esthetic and esoteric the-ory they have evolved. If there is one thing surer than taxes it is that a child left to himself will play, and that in playing in his own way he will get the largest amount of exercise and pleasure obtainable under the conditions.

A policeman in every playground to prevent bullying and preserve order is all the supervision children need, and more cranks will result in driving the children again to the streets from which they are supposed to be

School Gardens.

There certainly seems to be something in all Nature which works like a spirit in the work with children. Children are thus influenced to a greater or lesser d This influence over them is one reason for the great enthusiasm with which they enter into this garden work or any subject akin to it. What is the true garden spirit? In many cities school gardens are away from the school buildings, and the children often work there after school hours. In some cities gardens have been provided for the younger mill and factory employés, and these have proven great boons to these unfortunate children who are allowed a little more time once or twice week in which to care for their liftle plot. Gardis their pastime. They often say they wish they might have a gardening period overy day. They thoroughly enjoy it. The mothers, fathers, sisters and brothers e in to help and admire. They come to work with a smile and go away with a laugh. If there are any discouragements, such as a cow eating the produce, the soil getting dry, or any of the thousand and one things which might happen, they bravely go ahead and replant.

Kindergarten Work.

Where the teachers have a right conception of what a garden should be, it is remarkable what they will do. Kindergarten work cannot accomplish it all, but it is remarkable what they do accomplish by taking that small bit of ground, fertilizing it, shaking up the and doing their little planting. A beginning will have to be made in some way until the people know the value of such instruction, and after that there will be no trouble. If parents once understood the importance of the work, or that it is of enough importance, they would provide the ground. The pioneers will have to work it out under, perhaps, rather embarrassing circumstances. It is better as a rule not to use too much land. A space of two rods square is ample. Six feet square will do nicely if it is well prepared. The more important suggestion is this: Do not try to have the work done right off. If necessary, fertilize the land; haul manure on if the land is poor. Take away all the weeds and get the land in nice shape and make it succeed, so that the crops will be an encouragement to the pupils. The great trouble is to get some one to stay by it and look after it.

A THRILLING EPISODE OF THE REV-OLUTION IN PERU.

By a Special Contributor.

EVERAL years ago, during a revolution in Peru, Frank Marston was running an engine on the Mol-lendo, Arequipa and Puno Raliroad, which was used to a great extent, throughout the revolution, in moving troops. At that time many Americans were employed on the road, as few of the natives had the necsary experience. After the outbreak of hostilities their work became very dangerous.

For a few months the government was able to hold its own against the insurgents, but there came a time when a crisis was imminent. The railroad men did not know which way to turn, as it was impossible to foresee the

If they persisted in assisting the government and the insurgents were successful, they would be severely treated by the rebels. On the other hand, if they gave support to the insurgents and the government forces were victorious, it meant for them imprisonment and possible death. Marston was placed in a position even more critical than the others, for it was rumored he favored the insurgent cause on account of his love for the daughter of Sefior Don Manual Romano.

Two years previous to this time Marston had left the States, and in the course of his travels along the western coast of South America, he went to Arequipa. His money was almost gone when he arrived there, and it necessary for him to obtain employment.

Through the kindness of the American superintendent of the railroad he was given a position as an engineer Having much leisure time, when not on duty, he soon he well acquainted with the people and their cus-He mingled freely with them and was very pop-

Fond of excitement, and rather inclined to be reckless and daring, he had many admirers; but it was his kindly disposition that enabled him to make friends with the natives of Arequipa. A tall, handsome, well-propor-tioned man, he made a striking figure as he strolled about the streets of the city.

Occasionally he stopped at one or another of the characteristic shops of the place, where a cup of tea, mixed in the Peruvian fashion with a little pisco, could be obtained. He would usually linger, while he sipped the delightfully blended liquids, to have a chat with the cholo girl who served them, and sometimes he would seat himself at a table to drink for awhile with the natives who frequented these places. After a time, however, he became weary of the life, and began to long for som to break the monotony.

One day at the Hotel Central he met a young Englishman who introduced him to Señor Don Manuel Romano and his daughter Lucilia. Marston found Se Romano a very pleasant old gentleman, and in Lucilla became greatly interested at once. Her mother, who had died when Lucilla was very young, was an American, and the girl was one of those striking beauties one sees now and then among the women who spring from the mixture of the Latin and Anglo-Saxon races.

Seforita Romano had the black hair and eyes which are common to the people of the southern continent, but from her mother she had inherited a lighter complexion and an expression of more individuality and strength than the natives of Peru possess. Her teeth, which shone like ivory, her beautifully tinted complexion and sparkling black eyes, fascinated Marston decidedly.

They were all sitting on the hotel veranda, engaged in a desultory conversation. Señorita Romano appeared languid and indifferent.

"You were speaking. Señor Marston, concerning the trouble the syndicate which controls the railroads of this country has been having with the present adminis-tration," Señor Romano said abruptly. "It is a miserable shame and gross outrage the way the President and associates are extracting money from private corpora-tions to fill their own pockets," he continued indignantly. A quick change took place in Señorita Romano during these remarks. The languid expression fled, her whole being seemed to quiver with animation, and her very soul shone out through her eyes. The subject was evidently one in which she took an intense interest.

"It seems to me that the people must see the condition of affairs and must make an effort to put a stop to the rascalities of the government officials," replied Marston

"The people are blind. They continue to pay their taxes without complaint and allow the treasury to be robbed," Señor Romano said, becoming excited. "Some-thing must be done by those of us who can appreciate to a miserable condition the country is falling."

"I never could understand why such difficulties as now confront this country cannot be settled amicably and at the same time effectively," Marston said deliberately. 'You have a republican form of government; why don't you put in an administration that will do its duty conscientiously and work for the country's good?"
"A new administration is seldom better than the pre-replied Senor Ro ercely. ers of all the factions are rascals, and seek office only for the spoils. I tell you, the time has come when all those who have the interests of Peru at heart must hand themselves together and form a new government.

"Father, you are excited. Calm yourself," Senorita Romano said, soothingly. "Let us go for a walk."

After that day, Marston spent many hours with Señor Romano and his daughter. They frequently sat together in the Plaza, where a fountain splashed quietly, a band played softly, and the people passed in an endless procession, the women all looking much the same, with their black mantillas drawn closely about their heads and houlders, invariably accompanied by a near relative of the male sex.

MATIOOTONIO

The atmosphere of the place was seductive, and well-suited, it seemed to Marston, for lovemaking. But this he found almost impossible on account of the conven-tionalities of the people. He had become an easy victim to Lucilla's charms, but he could use only his eyes to communicate to her his feelings, for wherever they went, they were always accompanied by Señor Romano.

The affair soon began to assume a very serious as Marston realized that he really loved the girl, and his infatuation seemed to grow in great bounds each time he saw her, until there came a time when the few hours he spent on his engine each day were as so many days, separating him as they did from the evening when he could once more be with Lucilla. He became ambitious might have more to offer her, and did his work so well that the superintendent promised him a position

Shortly after Marston received this promise, the revolution broke out. He was very much worried, knowing that Señor Romano would be active in the insurgent

The revolution had hardly commenced when he heard that Ramona, having given his daughter into the care of his sister, had gone to Juliaco, where he was placed in command of the insurgent army which had been gath ered together at that place. For some time little wa accomplished by either side. The government had con trol of the railroad, by which it was concentrating a large number of troops at Arequipa; while Romano pla ned to make an attack upon them and capture the city, although greatly handicapped, having no way to move his troops quickly through the mountains.

Marston had not been able to see much of Lucilla dur-ing the later developments of the revolution, and one afternoon, after returning from his work, he received a note from her asking him to come to her at once. When he entered the Central, he saw her sitting with her aunt in the patio of the hotel.

"Your message caused me to hasten, Señorita, for I feared that you were in trouble," he said as he ap-

"I am very glad you have come, Señor Marston," she id eagerly. "I have been very anxious during the last w days. Have you heard any news?"

"No, I have heard nothing," Marston replied. "Informatton concerning the movements of the various armies is very difficult to obtain. At present, everything seems to be at a standstill, for if there had been any serious battles we certainly would have heard something."

Lucilla was nervous and constrained. She said noth-ing more until her aunt left them alone for a moment, when she arose, and standing near Marston, placed her is gently against his arms.

"I have something to tell you that no other ears but yours must hear," she said in a subdued voice. "An Indian brought word to me today from my father. His preparations are complete. The only thing he needs now is an engine to bring his troops through the mountains.

He asked me to help him. I thought of you and wrote you immediately. Will you take your engine to Juliaco and offer your assistance to my father? This is a great thing I ask of you, but it means a great deal for the Marston was rooted to the spot by the intensity of her appealing gaze, yet he hesitated before he answered her. He sympathized with the insurgent cause, for he knew it to be a just one, but he knew that it was his duty to follow the instructions of the superintendent and to assist the government. As he stood there thinking, he looked at the girl's face. He saw that it was white and drawn from anxiety, and he longed to take her in his arms and At that moment he realized that his passionate love for her was more to him than life itse

"I love you, Lucilla," he said, as he closed his hand wer hers. "For your sake, I will help your father."

Just at this time her aunt returned. Marston is them both good-by and quickly made his departure.

A few days after his interview with Lucilla, he was sent a short distance up the railroad to bring down some cars of provisions from Chullino, a small town between Arequipa and Juliaco. As the engine slowly climbed its way up the mountains, Marston knew that his chance to help Señor Romano had come. It took him but a short time to decide not to stop at Chullino, but to keep stead-ily on until he came to Juliaco.

The telegraph wires had been cut, so he felt certain that there would be no possibility of his being intercepted by telegraphic communications from Arequipa. He knew also that the Indians who inhabited the country between Chullino and Juliaco were for the greate part favorable to the insurgent cause. The agent a Chullino did not suspect anything when the engin The agent at passed by the station, and made no attempt to stop him.

His way was then clear. In a few hours he arrived at Juliaco, where Romano received him with open arms. He talked with much enthusiasm to Marston con his plans, and seemed confident of his success. A larg ber of cars were standing on the tracks about th station. As soon as those had been made up into a train, they were quickly filled with the soldiers and their equip-

The men gave Marston a rousing cheer when he started the train toward Arequipa. As they passed rapidly through the fittle towns adjacent to the railroad, the Indians on the streets waved their hats and shouted joyously to the soldiers who were leaning far out of the car windows. A few miles from the city, Marston brought the train to a stop. It was now almost dark, and it was decided that it would be best to go into camp and wait until the morning to make an attack, on account of the difficulty of approaching the city at night by the narrow untain trails.

At dawn, the troops were on the move. Coming near very cautiously, they made a fierce onslaught, but the ernment forces were ready for them, and a terrible hattle ensued. Romano encouraged his soldiers he possible way, but they were unable to gain an eninto the city, and after several hours of desperate ing, were repulsed.

Marston was among the captured, and the fact it had been instrumental in bringing the insurgent Juliaco was sufficient to condemn him in the eyes government officials. He spent the night in a narrow cell, and in the morning was taken to the to be shot. There the people gathered quickly in crowds. Already an earthen wall had been rain-front of which many insurgents had been executed ing the last few days.

It came as a great shock to Marston to learn th career was to find such an untimely end. manner in which he was treated bewilders. Through the long hours of the night he had been the hope that he would find some means of or that the intervention of the American Consul-be successful. That he was a citizen of the United had been sufficient to give him confidence of h least, but when he found that his own country of far removed to save him, and that the Consul was less to accomplish anything in his behalf, he was overcome. The Cox Family.

ARRIVAL IN NEW WORLD DATES FROM EARLIEST DAYS.

CHIEF, or leader of men, was a certain one, ages A ago, whether before Christ or after, who knows? From this, in course of time, he came to be called Cox or Coxe. The name, however, passed through a variety of forms; among the number may be named le Koc, Koka, Kokx, Cokke, Cok. Koch is the German form, and Kockx the Flemish. Variations of the name include Coxcle, Coxon and Coxcox.

Before Mayflower days, representatives of the Cox family were living here. William Coxe was on the muster rolls of Elizabeth City, Va., in 1624, aged 26. He had come over in the Godspede, in 1610, but three years after the settlement of Jamestown. The family has also been prominent in Maryland, since the time of the first settlement and the first of the family was also William, who was born in Derbyshire, England, 1607, May 26. He has the distinction of being written down "gent." in records of the time. His will was proved in 1649. Isaac Coxe of Talbot county, Maryland, is one ancestor of this branch of the family.

From Annapolis land records we find that David Cox was a proprietor in 1685. Edward Coxe of Kent county, took oath of allegiance April 5, 1652. Henry Cox had a plantation in St. Mary's county, 1651. Some years later he bought land on the Schuylkill River, where he married "the Widow Ward." He was then an M.D.

Thomas Cox of Calvert county, Maryland, who was living there about the middle of the seventeenth century, married Anne-her last name unknown-who came from Wiltshire, England.

The first in New England was William Cox, of Pemaquid, a place described as "west from the Penobscot."

He came from Bristol, England, according to tradition,

Sepreshed, and which town gave its where the family flourished, and which town gave its name to Bristol, Me. William Cox was living at Pemaquid in 1625. He had three sons, the eldest his name-sake, John and Thomas. The latter was one of eight Coxes who took the oath of freemen at Pemaquid, July 27, 1674. He was "a man of some quality among his townsmen." He removed to Boston. Edward, mariner, was living in Boston in 1672.

Shadrach Cox appears as one of Pemaquid's oathtakers, 1674, but little is known of him. In the Burgess book of the city of Bristol, England, is the name Shidracke Cox, date 1651, whose wife was Alice Hendris. He was probably the Shadrack of Pemaquid.

Lemuel, born in Boston 1736, bridge builder, for various services was granted 1000 acres in Maine, by act of Legislature. He was the first projector of powder mills in Massachusetts.

The "Historical Register of Affairs of the Continental Army" gives the names of Capt. Daniel, of New York; Lieut. Daniel Powell Cox of Delaware, who served through the war; Lieut.-Col. Ebenezer, who was killed at Vicksburg; Ensign Elisha and Lieut. Francis, both of Massachusetts: Maj. Richard, of New Jersey; Paymaster Isaac, Capt. William and Lieut. Joseph, of Pennsylvania, and Assistant Quartermaster-General John of Virginia.

In early Indian wars the Coxes also took their part valiantly—to mention only one, Robert, of Marbleh Mass. He was engaged in King Philip's War in 1675.

The women, too, were not one whit less patriotic. Hannah Cox, born at Preston, Conn., in 1776, whose father was a Revolutionary officer, after reaching the good old age of 100 years, used to recall with pride the fact that when she was five years old she knitted socks for me soldiers.

Cox family held its first reunion at the home of Capt. Henry Cox, Cox Corner, Mattapan, Mass., October

The object of the family association is to strengthen ties of kinship and to secure material for a history of the family. Some of the meetings have been held at Boston. Seventy-five were present at the first reunion. Nearly all were descendants of Robert Cox, who died in Bosto in 1773. A relic displayed at one reunion was the receipt given by the treasurer of the "State of Massachusetts Bay" to Thomas Cox in 1777, promising to repay £50 17s. loaned for the use and service of the State.

Among the papers read at these meetings may be mentioned "The Cox Name in Old England," "The Coxes in the Revolution," and "Pemaquid, the Eden of the Cox Family."

The family has its historian in Sir George Cox, born in England in 1827. On the death of his uncle, Sir Edmun Cox, he succeeded to the baronetcy, being the fifteenth in succession from Sir Richard, Chancellor of Ireland. Besides his histories. Sir George contributed to the Encyclopedia Britannica.

The artist was David Cox, born in 1783, neaf Birmingham, England. Like many another, he knew how to practice economy, being forced to it by stern necessity. At times, to save the cost of a canvas, he covered up one picture by another. When these works were prepared for resale fifty years after, some of them yielded picture after picture, realed of the heart like the control of the picture. picture, peeled off the boards like the waistcoats from the body of the grave digger in "Hamlet." At one time, seeing no end to the accumulation of his pictures, for which there was no sale, he tore them up and threw them into drains. Some years after he pointed out a particular drain to a friend, saying:

Many a work of mine has gone down that way to the Thames.'

Before he died his pictures brought enormous sums, which fact gives a dramatic interest to the story of his early struggles.

The ecclesiastical dignitaries of the family are Richard, Bishop of Ely in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and Arthur Cleveland Coxe of our time, Bishop of Western New York and author. He was son of Samuel Hanson Cox, eminent Presbyterian divine and a descendant of the Maryland branch of the family.

Edward Travers Cox, born in Virginia and removing to Indiana before middle life, is renowned as a geologist. One of the statesmen of the family is Samuel Sullivan' Cox of Ohio, lawyer, Congressman, author, and Minister to Turkey-"Sunset Cox." as he was called.

Marriage connections include the families of Parker. Millfkin, Dawson, Powell and Atkinson. Favorite Christian names of early generations are Remember, Thankful, Comfort, Prudence, Peggie, Nabbie, Judith and Rose-

THE TRUE STORY OF THE LITTLE FELLOW'S DOG.

By a Special Contributor.

HE syringa bushes were flinging out their sweetscented white blossoms on each side of the graveled path, and down the quiet village street the maples were uncurling, almost before one's eyes, their tender green leaves.

The soft air spoke of spring, and all the homely famillar sounds that come at twilight seemed different, some how, as the magic of the great new birth of all things had changed them.

Somewhere a bonfire of last year's leaves was burning, and the pleasant, pungent odor from it, and the thin ribbon of blue smoke came as the true heralds of the spring-

Girls in light dresses hung upon gates and chattered with one another, or sauntered down the village street to stoffice in the pleasant village fashion.

On the front porch of the wide, white-painted old house, a group had gathered to enjoy the soft air. It seemed delightful to sit out of doors again, with the open hall door behind them and a cheery flicker of wood fire in the grate, for though the outside air was balmy, there yet lingered a chill within that made a wood fire

The Little Fellow turned in at the gate bareheaded, flushed, excited, his blue eyes eager with delight and pride. Close at his heels tagged the dog—a poor, bedraggled specimen of doghood—unspeakably ugly in appearance. One ear, torn and ragged, but long since healed from some encounter, a drooping tail, a small, lean body, brownish yellow in color—a general hangdog, meeching look—taken all in all, he was anything in the world but attractive.

The Little Fellow caught sight of them in the soft dusk. "He's mine to keep! He's mine to keep!" he shouter in his shrill, sweet voice. "A man gave him to me, he did, honest and true! I've named him Tiger, and I'll bet you he'll be a tiger, too! Ain't he a fine dog, ain't

Some one on the porch laughed, and there was a chorus of protest. Then his mother's voice spoke: "But, dear, you can't keep him, you know! That homely, no-account dog! Take him to the gate and send him off."

Great-Aunt Marietta gathered her prim skirts around "Mercy, child! Of all things, for anybody to im pose upon a child by giving him a mongrel like that!

The Little Fellow looked from face to face in surprise. "Don't you like my dog?" he inquired slowly; and then he turned to his father.
"Can't I keep him, Father?" he asked. "I won't let him bother anybody, or come in the house, and I'll feed him my own self, and everything!"

His father smiled down into the Little Fellow's eyes It was hard to refuse him anything-but this worthless

"Let him go, son," he said kindly, "and if you really want a dog, we'll see about getting a good one. Such a dog as that would be a diagrace to the family. I never such a meeching-looking creature in my

The Little Fellow ran to his mother and buried his face in her lap. He was too proud to let them see the tears that would not be held back. His mother smoothed his close-cropped head and soothed him. "There, there, dear. Father knows best. Father'll get you a nice dog for your very own

Smothered sounds rose from her lap. Then the Little Fellow lifted a red and tear-stained face. "But he's mine!" he said. "The man gave him to me! I don't want any other dog, and I think he's just lovely!"

He sat down on the top step and the miserable dog came and sat close beside him, hanging a dejected head.

in slient sympathy. In dog fashion he understood that he was in a hostile camp.

Great-Aunt Marietta rose and shook out her skirts. She paused in the doorway. "Well, I must say, William," she said to her nephew, "I hope you'll be firm and not give in to that child this time. That utterly ridiculous creature! I declare, I believe there's a fiea on me this minute! And like as not he's mangy!"

She went inside and up the stairs to her room. Little Fellow's father laughed in his easy way. "Well, you'll really have to send him away, son," he said. "We can't have such a specimen as that around here, and

The Little Fellow went dejectedly down to the gate, the dog following close at his heels. He went down the street a little way, then stopped and tried to speak sternly to the despised animal, which looked at him in wounded surprise, then turned and slunk away.

The family drew a breath of relief, and Great-Aunt arietta's voice came down the stairs. "I'll admit you Marietta's voice came down the stairs. "I'll admit you showed a little firmness for once, William," she said commendingly. His mother took the Little Fellow into her lap and held him close in her arms. He was very quiet, but in his little heart was hot resentment. His dog—his very own—sent away wretched and homeless, like that! What would he do for something to eat? Where would be sleep?

But when the Little Fellow ran out, the next morning, to greet the new day in his joyous fashion, there, sitting solemnly upon the steps, was the despised dog. And it the house they both ran to proclaim the glad tidings.

"What, that dog back again?" It was his father's voice which tried to be severe, but could not quite manage it. The breakfast had been unusually good, the morning paper brought news which interested him, and the sunshine of a perfect spring day poured in at the pleasant bay window.

He looked over at Great-Aunt Marietta in her gown of spotless neatness, her stern eyes looking through goldbowed glasses, her mouth and chin firmer, it se her nephew, than ever before. But a wave of love for the Little Fellow seemed suddenly to surge over him, and the trusting blue eyes raised to his did not plead in vain. "Well, sonny boy," he said, "he's come back, has he? Must be he thinks you'd be a good master. If Mamma's willing to let him stay, why, I don't care."

The Little Fellow ran to his mother, where she tended plants and vines in the bay window. There was a hurried conference, a laugh, and then a vigorous hug and

He was so happy that the whole room seemed fit with added sunshine. But Great-Aunt Marietta, loved him in her severe, undemonstrative way, looked with cold disfavor upon both child and dog

"William," she said, "I must say I'm astonished! I did think, last night, you were going to show a little firm-ness for once, and here you are giving in to that child in this ridiculous fashion! That dreadful dog! I actually did find a fiea last night! I knew there was one!"

Her nephew laughed. "Well, Aunt," he said easily, "you needn't be astonished at anything I do. I've always contended that you had firmness for a whole family! come, now, Aunt Marietta, seriously, why not let the Little Fellow have his dog and be happy? He isn't much on looks, I'll admit-that dog-but I'll wager he's faithfulness personified. Run away now, son, and give the poor beggar a square meal. He looks as though he'd never had one."

From that hour Great-Aunt Marietta hated the Little Fellow's dog with a vigorous hatred. Her dislike even seemed to extend to the Little Fellow himself, for dog and master were almost never apart.

The dog improved slightly in appearance. Good food, a comfortable bed and much petting from the Little Fellow made life worth living to the homely, homeless dog. He tried, humbly, to make friends with the family, and was tolerated for the Little Fellow's sake, but Great-Aunt Marietta was not to be propitiated. Her brows drew together darkly, and she saw to it that her stuffy-starched skirts never touched him. The dog soon learned to avoid her, for more than once he had been driven from his corner on the porch and assisted down the steps by the aid of her cane.

Through the long, bright summer the Little Fellow and the dog were happy as only a boy and a dog can be in a quiet, sleepy village where the woods and streams lie near at hand. There were long, delightful hours to-gether in field and pasture and down by the creek, where they waded and fished, and dreamy afternoons in the shadowy woods, where the beeches interlaced their green hes above winding, fern-bordered paths

In the autumn there was fever in the village, and nong the first to be touched by its hot finger was the Little Fellow. In the old white house there were sor-row and dread and pale, anxious faces. The dog wan-dered drearly about the house and yard, listening, wait-ing, wondering. His ragged ear drooped dejectedly ling, wondering. His ragged ear drooped dejectedly above one eye, but the other was alert with hope. Every time the door opened, the dog sprang up and looked eagerly for the slight, boyish figure he knew so well—the one human being in all the world he cared to see!

The doctor noticed the forlorn animal, and spoke kindly to him as he untied his horse. The Little Fellow's father stooped and patted him gently, while his lips trembled strangely. The tired, pale-faced mother caught him up in her arms and hid her tear-wet eyes upon his scrubby head. The dog was dumbly grateful for all this unusual attention, but it was not what he wanted. There was only one voice in all the world of voices he longed to hear—only one small face in all the voices he longed to hear—only one small face in all the world of faces he cared to see.

When the turning point came, there was an awful stillness about the old house. For hours they had sat there—the Little Fellow's nearest and dearest—in the big, oldfashioned chamber where the small, wasted figure lay so still in the wide bed. The father, anxious-eyed and hag-gard from lack of sleep—the mother, patient, speechless with a nameless dread—and Great-Aunt Marietta, in her straight-backed rocker, with her pale, worn face ever turned to the boy's bedside.

How still it was in the sickroom! Outside, from down the street, came the usual twilight sounds hoys at play, a distant tinkle from some girl's guita rse's neighing, the shrill chirping of a cricket in the

The doctor came in quietly and went to the bedside. He looked long at the child, laid a cool finger upon slender wrist, listened to his breathing, and with the others sat silent—waiting.

When the child stirred and awakened, the doctor bent over him again. Then he raised a face so full of joy that the others in the room understood, in one glad heartbeat, that the Little Fellow would live.

that the Little Fellow would live.

A little later the Little Fellow asked for the dog. The small voice was very weak and thin, but they caught the wistful note in it as he made his request.

His father smiled, and rose to go, but Great-Aunt Marietta signed him to say. She would go—the stately old lady, leaning upon her cane, her fine old face alight with the inner joy that shone there because the Little Fellow was going to get well. She found him on the front steps—the homely, lonely dog-and down she sat beside him and laid a gentle old hand upon his rough little h lap, and she let him stay, crying a little, softly, as she talked to him in broken words of joy and thanksgiving, for until the Little Fellow's feet had wandered in the Valley of the Shadow she had not known how precious, how dear he was to her—and even this scrubby, ill-favored dog of his for his dear sake was dear to her.

A little later the father and mother looked up sur-prised, for into the soft candle light came Great-Aunt Marietta, leaning on her cane and with the Little Fel-low's dog snuggled upon her arm. The Little Fellow saw them both, and lifted a weak little hand. The smile that shone on his small face was as near the sa angel as mortals are ever permitted to see.

"Ain't he a nice dog, Auntie?" he cried in he oice. "You do like my doggie, don't you?"

Great-Aunt Marietta sat down beside the bed the frail little hand on the dog's head.

"Yes, darling," she said, "Auntie does like him the nicest dog in the world!"

A little later the child lay sleeping swee hand still resting on the dog's head, and a Marietta sitting patiently with the Little Fello her lap. The father and mother had slipped to seek a little rest, and the old lady sat the soft candle light alone with the Little Felle dog. In her old heart a sweet, low psalm was itself—a psalm of thanksgiving and peace.

HERMOSA LEYENDA EN FRANCES TRADUCIDA Y AUMENTADA.

PINES del sigio XVIII era Biarritz un pobre y descido pueblecito de pescadores, cuyas escasas chos no tenian otro espacio que los huecos de la acanceta y cuyos pocos barcos no hallaban otro abrigo del puertecillo que todavia dura. Gracias á que maidad del mar, ofrecia à la existencia de aquellas ma amplitud de horizonte y un elemento de vida tierra les negaba; y, por eso, los ofrecia con su uns pesca á cuyo oficio se dedicaban sus habimetos, confiados en su destrera y valor, y protejir la monumental crus de madera que, colocada en alto de la atalaya, destacándose siempre sobre el sendo visible, desde larga distancia, parecia cobisus ahiertos brazos à los pescadores é indicarles de peligro, el verdadero puerto de salvación.

Sos puede decirse, en el mar; criadeos en él; viam sobre sus aguas que en la tierra; saturados del se de sus brisas; acustumbrados à sus bellas n como à sus tempestuosos furores, los hijos de soble tenian un carácter semejante al del palsaje rodeaba y con el cual se habían connaturalizado: eries como las peñas de la costa; sanos como las ecéano; apscibles à veces, y en otras, iracundos, era el mar en que vivian; con un idioma sonoro on, como lo son las olas al morir en la playa; y af religiosa, pura é inmensa, como la bóveda cesa los cubria. Calló Oura, oprimido por el llanto, y despues de un breve silencio Ederra que se hallaba sumida como en un profundo éxtasis volvió á la realidad y contemplando á Oura todavia á sus pies, le asió con suma dulzura por las manos y levantándole le dijo:

—No llores, querido Oura, no llores—y cobijândole con una amorosa mirada llena de duices promesas añadio: "Esta tarde, cuando vuelvas de la pesca, te daré mi respuesta"—y alentándole con otra encantadora mirada se despidió de Oura, que se quedó inmóvil contemplándola hasta que se perdió de vista y alimentando en su pecho esperanzas bienhechoras.

La tradición refiere que el diálogo anterior tuvo lugar apenas rayó el alba de uno de los primeros dias de Octubre del año 17—y que poco desques salian del puertecito de Blarritz todas las barcas pescadoras, añadiendo que el padre de Ederra no iba en la suya por hallarse algo enfermo. La mañana de aquel dia trascurrió apacible sin incidente alguno, pero al mediar la tarde, espesos aubarrones y aire ciciónico que aparecieron por el N. O. hacian temer un fuerte temporal: el mar se agitaba mas violento que antes, levantando grandes y continuas olas, rugiendo con horrisona voz, luminosos relámpago de nagro cielo y, huyendo de la amenazadora. mas violento que antes, levantando grandes y continuas olas, rugiendo con horrisona vos, luminosos relámpagos rasgaban el negro cielo y, huyendo de la amenazadora tormenta, iban volviendo al puerto todas lambarcas . . . menos la del padre de la hermosa Ederra. La tempestad se hallaba en su apogeo: truenos, relámpagos, vientos, lluvia, oleajs, todo se conjuraba contra los hombres y, como si esto no fuera bastante dominado de la contra los hombres y, como si esto no fuera bastante dominado de la contra la contra los hombres y, como si esto no fuera bastante dominado de la contra la los hombres y, como si esto no fuera bastante domi-nando á los imponentes ruidos de la iracunda Naturaleza, dejaron escuchar en el puertecito los tristisimos sones de la campana del vigia anunciando que alguna nave naufragaba en aquellas aguas. Sin temor á los elemen-tos desencadenados, todos los moradores del pueblecito salferon de sus chozas, para prestar á los que pe el auxilio que pudieran; y, por lo que percibia la vista, por el grito angustioso que exaló Ederra, todos compren-dieron que era la barca de su padre la que se perdia y que en ella iba Oura.

En efecto, alli mismo, casi á la entrada del puerto, la misera barca había sido llevada por una corriente al centro de un remolino y, como si tuviese un invencible eje, giraba, dando rápidas vueltas, recibiendo de costado terribles golpes de mar, medio tumbada por el viento y próxima á zozobrar. En vano los tripulantes querian, a fuerza de remos, sacarla del remolino; y en vano los de tierra trataban de auxiliarlos, pues el estado de mar los imposibilitaba. Era, dice la leyenda, un atroz espectáculo al ver á aquellos hombres de la barca en un peligro tan terrible, luchando herolcamente contra un mar y un cielo tempestuoso, y hallándose tan cercanos del puerto muerte; y todos los habitantes del puertecito, desde la playa y desde las rocas, asistiendo forzosamente in-activos a aquel suceso, reconociéndo y llamando por sus nombres a los remeros, animandolos los hombres con sus consejos y las mujeres con sus oraciones; y la pobre Ederra, cual nueva Niobe, como viviente estatua del do lor, fijos sus lindos y amantes ojos en la figura de Oura que se destacaba sobre la espuma blanca de las olas; y el mar cada vez más iracundo; y el remolino cada vez rápido; el viento cada vez más violento; y el trueno cada vez más sonoro; y la barca cada vez más perdida; y la campana del vigia cada vez más triste!

De repente se vió que todos los tripulantes de la barca se ponian de ple y, á una voz de Oura, haciendo un ulco esfuerzo, lograron vencer el rem remar contra la corriente, y saltando de ola en ola, impulsando la barca con aliento soberano, llegaron al puerto antes de anochecer, sanos y salvos, siendo recibi-dos por todo el pueblo con gritos de alegría.

Al desembarcar Oura, Ederra le dijo en voz baja con emocionado acento:

-"Esta noche te esperaré en la gruta de la playa." Habia por entonces y existe todavla, en la playa que se extiende desde el cabo San Martin hasta la barra del puerto de Bayona, una gruta no muy grande form por la naturaleza en las ultimas ramificaciones de las peñas de la costa, cuya gruta tiene su entrada por la playa y a cuyo interior liegan las olas en las grandes cita de amor á su adorado Oura, y alli los vió á la luna, cuando en la noche de aquel dia brilló en el cielo, pene-trando su perlada luz en la gruta para alumbrar la herıra de la muchacha, la pasión del remero y la felicidad de ambos.

—"Oura, repiteme lo que me dijiste esta mañana." Y él la contestó:

-Ederra mia: te dije esta mafiana que te queria con emente, con cariño tal que dudo no sea Inspirado por el cielo; y ahora añado que te adoro con locura, que te idólatro, que te amo á ti sola, como amarte no puede otro hombre sobre la tierra. Ahora, dime, Ederra encantadora, me quieres tu? Ella contestó ruborosa:

"Te quiero, si!"

Y 61, loco de alegria, le dijo entonces:

-Oh criatura angelical! Ederra de mi alma! bendita mil veces seas por lo feliz que me haces! . . . Como podré recompensarte tan inmenso beneficio? pues me devuelves la vida que te entregué. Si antes no tenia familia ninguna, por tu amor la tengo, pues tu seras la esposa de mi alma, la madre de mis hijos; si carezco de posicion social, yo trabajaré mucho para ti, para ahorrar y poder comprarme una barca propia; y si no tengo un mbre que ofrecerte, tengo un nombre que adorar; el tuyo, vida de mi vida!

Ella le ola con embleso, escuchando ávidamente las amorosas y dulces palabras de su amante; él estaba enagenado de placer al verse á solas con su preciosa Ederra; los dos se hallaban sentados en los salientes del interior de aquella gruta, arrullados por el ruido de las olas y alumbrados por la plateada luz de la benévola luna. Largo rato llevaban hablando sin cesar de su cariño, sin darse cuenta de que el tiempo corria, creyen-dose solos en el mundo y recreándose en su mutuo amor.

Ella le preguntó con encantadora é inocente coquete

-"Dime, querido Oura, soy linda como tu dices?" Ederra de mi vida, contestó el enamorado muchacho, eres más, mucho más linda; eres lindisima, hermosa, ideal, preciosisima, divina; pareces una estatua de Venus en la playa, pareces un arcangel en formas de mujer: eres mas blanca que la espuma que surge de estas olas, tu frente es un destello del sol matutinal, tu voz es el susurro del viento entre las ondas, tu talle es la palmera que azota el vendaval. Es tu boca un nido de perfecciones que, cuando hablas enamora, cuando ries enloquece y cuando beses . . . será un cielo; son tus ojos soles, por lo hermosos, y luceros, por lo brilliantes; cuando los abres me atraen, cuando los cierras .

atraen tambien, y cuando me miran como ahora me vuelven loco, más que loco, idiota: es tu caballera her-mosisima y sobre tu nitida frente caen tus risos como bordaduras de oro; son tus manos pequeñas, lindas y blancas como los copos de la nieve, y tan suaves y deli-cadas como los copos del algodon: si, Ederra mia, eres bella como los querubes y despides luces como no los des-pide el astro de los astros, eres la beldad misma como tu

-Un ruido fuerte y aspero, una verdadera tromba de agua salada, interrumpieron en aquel instante tan dulce coloquio; y cuando los dos amantes se volvieron á mirar que ocurría, vieron con espanto que el mar llegaba á la entrada de la gruta. Era que, entretenidos por la conentrada de la gruta. Era que, entretenidos por la con-versacion, no se habían fijado en que hacia rato llegó la hora de subir la marea, una de las mayores del año, en la que el océano llenaba por completo la gruta; era que una muerte inevitable y espantosa iba á tronchar sus ensueños de amorosa vida; era que aquella primer cita de amor, sería la ultima!

Instantaneamente comprendieron lo inmiente del

Y, entre tanto, la marea seguia subiendo . . . subi-

Los dos amantes se pusieron en pie sobre los picachos de la roca en que estaban sentados, y Oura le dijo á Ederra; Trataré de salvar á nado la entrada de la gruta, para llevarte en brazos á la playa; reza por mi, y espérame un momento. Ella, asustada, asintió á todo, y él se arrojó al agua; pero apenas comenzó á nadar, cuando, dentro de la misma gruta, una inmensa ola le envolvió por completo y le tiró con fuerza cerca de Ederra; se levantó nuevamente y sin hacer caso de las suplicas de ella, intentó salir de nuevo y le sucedió de nuevo lo mismo que antes, pues su empresa era cada vez más dificil porque la marea seguia subiendo . . .

Becalmed

HERE is a concert singer in the West whose voice is not only of great sweetness and compass, but of such extraordinary power that no orchestra ever drowns its tones.

Now the husband of this singer frequently acts as her conductor, and he is ever anxious to impress upon the public the fact of the great power of his wife's voice. On one occasion the lady was rehearing for a concert to be given in a large hall. In one of her songs she was to be accompanied by a trumpet obligate. Although the performer, in obedience to instructions from the conductor, blew with all his might and main, yet his best efforts were invariably met with a call of "Louder, louder!" from the insatiable leader,

Finally the performer rested his instrument on his knee and, surveying the leader with every evidence of indignation on his purple face, broke out with:

'Louder and louder' is fery easy to say, but vere is de vind?"-[Harper's Weekly.

A BROOKLYN man tells of some juvenile theatricals in which his children were interested. The children were giving a little drama of their own, wherein court-ships and weddings played a leading part in the plot. It appears that during the progress of the play the Brook-lyn man had gone behind the scenes, where he found his youngest offspring sitting in a corner.
"Why, Marie," asked he, "have you been left out of the play? Why aren't you on with the others?"

"I'm not left out," indignantly denied Marie, "I'm the

A Bad Case of Sabbath-Breaking

ON a recent Monday morning the pastor of achurch in Virginia was the recipient of a basket of strawberries brought to him by a little girl of the parish.

THE proprietor of a tanyard built a stand on one of the main streets of a Virginia town for the purpose of selling leather and buying new hides. When he had completed the building he considered for a long time what sort of sign to put up to attract attention to the new establishment. Finally a happy thought struck him. He bored an auger hole through the door post and stuck a calf's tail into it with the tufted end

After a while he saw a solemn-faced man standing near the door looking at the sign, his eyes in a round, meditative stare behind his spectacles. The tanner watched him a minute, then stepped out and addressed

"Good-morning, sir!" he said.
"Morning!" said the other, without taking his eyes off

"Want to buy leather?" asked the tanner "No."

'Got any hides to sell?"

"Are you a farmer?"

'Merchant?"

GEN. WILLIAM W. BELKNAP went to the War of the Rebellion as major of the Fifteenth Iowa Infantry. In one of the companies of that regiment was a young fellow named Darby Greely. When the regiment was marching over the gangplank

"Well, on a first night at a theater in Paris, a huge claque sat in the gallery, and, to the surprise of every-body, this claque, at every climax in the performance, applauded and hissed simultaneously. From the hands of the men came a thunder of approval, but from their mouths issued hisses of disgust.

"'What the deuce,' said a young man to the leader of the claque, 'is the meaning of all this?' Are you fellows

"'Oh, no; not at all,' the leader replied. "You see, the author of this new piece paid me to get fifty men to ap-plaud, while his rival from the theater across the wsy, paid me an equal sum to hiss the piece off the stage."

A Feathered Quadruped

MINIOCTONIC

PROF. W. S. CAMPBELL, the superintendent of the Indian school at Pipestone, Minn., was talking about examinations which, at this season, rack and harass the breasts of the young of America.

"The stoical young Indian, no less than the emotional young paleface, is scared," said Prof. Campbell, "at the June examinations' coming. And in examination he, like the rest of the juvenile world, makes a great many odd mistakes.

"At Pipestone, in a recent examination in etymology, a teacher said to a lad:

"'A thing with four legs, the boy answered promptly.
"'Good,' said the teacher. 'And are there any feath-

"'Oh, there are, are there?" laughed the teacher.

"'A feather bed,' said the boy."

The man appears to have no moral sense. Accused of some flagrant place of corruption, he will, ten to one, admit his guilt with pride. He reminds me of a waiter in a certain Fort Dodge restaurant.

This restaurant was a poor one. The Fort Dodge people would not support it. It is now no more.

The dinner began with soup. The waiter was very care-

Conservative Senator Tillman

SENATOR TILLMAN, the eat-'em-alive statesman from South Carolina, and Former Senator William E. Chandler of New Hampshire are close friends. When Chandler was in the Senate he had a habit of jumping in when Tillman was speaking, goading him to fury Chandler has a waspish way with him-and then sitting down and watching Tillman perform.

Tillman took it all in good part, and now they are bosom companions. After Tillman had been put in charge of the railroad rate bill in the Senate he consulted Chandler about his report. Chandler took the manuscript and read it carefully. He came to a sentence which concluded: "Men so rich they do not know within a score of millions how much they own or, more properly pseaking, how much they have stolen from the people.

"I think, Tillman," said Chandler, "that I would that word 'stolen' to 'seized.' " own wet garment. It was meet that they together thus. It had been the one ceral event which they had felt inevitably approaching from long back. And it was fitting, moreover, that they should fight alone and unwitnessed, armed only with the weapons of the wilderness, for they were both of the far, free lands, were both of the fighter's type, and had both warred for the first, great prize.

They met feroclously. McNamara aimed a fearful, blow, but Glenister met him squarely, beating him off cleverly, stepping in and out, his arms swinging loosely from his shoulders like whalebone withes tipped with lead. He moved lightly, his footing made doubly secure by reason of his soft-soled mukluks. Recognizing his opent's greater weight, he undertook merely the headlong rushes and remain out of reach as long as sible. He struck the politician fairly in the mout that the man's head snapped back and his fists went wild then, before the arms could grasp him, the miner had broken ground and whipped another blow across; but McNamara was a boxer himself, so covered and blocked it. The politician spat through his mashed lips and rushed again, sweeping his opponent from his feet.

Again Glenister's fist shot forward like a lump of granite, but the other came on head down and the blow fin ished too high, landing on the big man's brow. A sudden darting agony paralyzed Roy's hand, and he realized that he had broken the metacarpal bones and that hence it would be useless. Before he could recover, McNamara had passed under his extended arm and seized him by the middle, then, thrusting his left leg back of Glenister's, he whirled him from his balance, flinging him clear and with resistless force. It seemed that a fatal fall must follow, but the youth squirmed catlike in the air, landing with set muscles which rebounded like rubber. Even so, the receiver was upon him before he could rise, reaching for the young man's throat with his heavy hands. Glen-ister recognized the fatal "strangle hold" and, seizing his enemy's wrists, endeavored to tear them apart, but his left hand was useless, so with a mighty wrench he freed himself, and, locked in each other's arms, the men strained and swayed about the office till their neck veins were bursting, their muscles paralyzed.

Men may fight duels calmly, may shoot or parry or thrust with cold deliberation; but when there co jar of body to body, the sweaty contact of skin to skin the play of iron muscles, the painful gasp of exhaustion—then the mind goes skittering back into its dark recesses while every venomous passion leaps forth from its hiding place and joins in the horrid war.

They tripped across the floor, crashing into the parti-tion, which split, showering them with glass. They fell and rolled in it; then, by consent, wrenched them apart and rose, eye to eye, their jaws hanging, their lungs wheezing, their faces trickling blood and sweat. Glenister's left hand pained him excruciatingly, while Glenister's left hand pained him excruciatingly, while McNamara's macerated lips had turned outward in a hideous pout. They crouched so for an instant, cruel, beatial—then clinched again. The office fittings were wrecked utterly and the room became a litter of ruins. The men's garments fell away till their breasts were bare and their arms swelled white and knotted through the rags. They knew no pain, their bodies were insensate machinisms.

Gradually the older man's face was beaten into a shapeless mass by the other's cunning blows, while Glen-ister's every bone was wrenched and twisted under his enemy's terrible onslaughts. The miner's chief effort, it is true, was to keep his feet and to break the man's em-braces. Never had he encountered one whom he could not beat by sheer strength till he met this great, snarling creature who worried him hither and you as though he were a child. Time and again Glenister beat upon the face with the blows of a sledge. No rule erned this solitary combat; the men were deaf to all but the roaring in their ears, blinded to all but hate, insensible to everything but the blood mania. Their tramp-ling feet caused the building to rumble and shake as though some monster were running amuck.

To this day, from Dawson to the Straits, from Unga to the Arctics, men tell of the combat wherever they fore-gather at flaring camp fires or in dingy bunk houses; and although some scout the tale, there are others who saw it and can swear to its truth. These say that the encounter was like the battle of bull moose in the rutting season, though more terrible, averring that two men like these had never been known in the land since the days of Vitus Bering and his crew; for their rancor had swollen till at feel of each other's flesh they ran mad and felt superhuman strength. It is true, at any rate, that felt superhuman strength. It is true, at any rate, that neither was conscious of the filling room, nor the cries of the crowd, even when the marshal forced himself or the crowd, even when the marshal forced himself through the wedged door and fell upon the nearest, which was Glenister. He came at an instant when the two had paused at arm's length, glaring with rage-drunken eyes, gasping the labored breath back into their

With a fling of his long arms the young man hurled the intruder aside so violently that his head struck the iron safe and he collapsed insensible. Then, without apparent notice of the interruption, the fight went on.

McNamara's distress was patent to his antagonist, who advanced upon him with the hunger of promised victory; but the young man's muscles obeyed his commands slug-gishly, his ribs seemed broken, his back was weak, and on the inner side of his legs the flesh was quivering. they came together the boss reached up his right hand and caught the miner by the face, burying thumb and fingers crab-like into his cheeks, forcing his slack jaws every ounce of his strength in the effort to maim. Glenister felt the flesh giving way and flung himself backward to break the hold, whereupon the other summoned his wasting energy and plunged toward the safe, where lay the revolver. Instinct warned Glenister of treachery, told him that the man had sought this last resource to save himself, and as he saw him turn his back and reach for the weapon, the youth leaped like a panther, seizing him about the waist, grasping McNamara's wrist with his right hand. For the first time during the combat they were not face to face, and on the instant Glenister realized the advantage given him through the other's perfidy, realized the wrestler's hold was his, and knew that the moment of victory was come.

The telling takes much time, but so quickly h things happened that the footsteps of the soldiers had not yet reached the door when the men were locked beside the safe.

Of what happened next many garbled accounts have gone forth. Some claim that the younger man was seized with a fear of death which multiplied his enormous strength; others that the power died in his adversary as reward for his treason; but it was not so.

No sooner had Glenister encompassed McNamara's waist from the rear than he slid his damaged hand up past the other's chest and around the back of his neck. thus bringing his own left arm close under his enemy's left armpit, wedging the receiver's head forward, while with his other hand he grasped the politician's right wrist close to the revolver, thus holding him in a grasp which could not be broken. Now came the test. two bodies set themselves rock-like and rigid. There was no lunging about.

Calling up the final atom of his strength. Glenister bore backward with his right arm and it became a contest for the weapon which, clutched in the two hands, swayed back and forth or darted up and down, the fury of resistance causing it to trace formless patterns in the with its muzzle. McNamara shook himself, but he was close against the safe and could not escape, his head bowed forward by the lock of the miner's left arm, and so he strained till the breath clogged in his throat. De-spite the grievous toil his right hand moved back slightly. His feet shifted a bit, while the blood seemed bursting from his eyes, but he found that the long fingers encircling his wrist were like gyves weighted with the strength of the hills and the irresistible vigor of youth which knew no defeat. Slowly, inch by inch, the great man's arm was dragged back, down past his side, while the strangling labor of his breath showed at what awful cost. The muzzle of the gun described a semicircle and the knotted hands began to travel toward the left, more rapidly now across his broad back. Still he struggled and wrenched, but uselessly. He strove to fire the weapon, but his fingers were woven about it so that the upward.

The white skin beneath the men's strips of clothing was stretched over great knots and ridges which sunk and swelled and quivered.

"It's the hammer lock—the hammer lock."

By now McNamara's arm was bent and cramped upon his back, and then they saw Glenister's shoulder dip, his elbow come closer to his side, and his body heave in one final terrific effort as though pushing a heavy weight. In the silence something snapped like a stick. There came a deafening report and the scream of a strong man overe with agony. McNamara went to his knees as ged forward on to his face as though every bone in his huge bulk had turned to water, while his master reeled back against the opposite wall, his beels dragging in the litter, bringing up with outflung arms as though fearful of failing, swaying, blind, exhausted, his face blackeness by the explosion of the revolver, yet grim with the light of victory.

The Judge shouted hysterically:

"Arrest that man, quick. Don't let him go!"
It was the miner's first realization that others were.

Raising his head he stared at the faces closeagainst the partition, then groaned the words: -and-I broke him with "I beat the traitor-and-

THE EXAMINATION SEASON.

In this examination season, teachers talk much of the examination papers that, from sunset until the small hours, they sit and mark.

Some teachers the other day were lunching together. "A little boy," one said, "handed me a paper on physiology yesterday. In this paper, describing shoemaking as an occupation injurious to the health, the boy wrote: This trade is injurious because the shoemakers press the shoes against the thorax, and therefore it presses the thorax in, and it touches the heart, and if they do not die they are cripples for life."

"In an etymology lesson," said a second teacher, "a little girl defined dust as 'mud with the juice squeezed out.' A boy defined a snake as 'a thing that is tail all the way up to the head.' A young Indian defined a baby as 'a meat doll.' "

"Those definitions," said a third teacher, "are as good as the well-known ones that describe a ship as 'a prison with the chance of being drowned;' dogmatism as 'puppyism come to maturity;' anxiety as 'fear spread out thin, and a prodigy as 'every mother's first baby.'"

all men to be the type of their keeper. He has made add $7 for sundries, the output of this year so far is not up his mind that of course such expensive stock with such expensive environments, with grain as high as it always has to be in this southern country, could not be made into a paying investment, that hens can add to a man's wealth only on a big ranch where the grain and much food can be grown, where the flock can run at large, and roost in trees, and mongrel out-putting. How many such visitors the hostesses of home flocks have! The smart young mistress replied, "They serve us well." "In dollars and cents?" he added. "Yes, they pay in cold dollars, but we are the kind of people who shiver when we put dollars equal to our partings with our stock. Of course we have to sell chickens and eggs if we keep thirty on this city lot and keep our chicken books in-dexed to profit. "Chicken cranks run this flock, eh? The kind that dread to kill chickens, because of think-ing they love them, who give away their surplus stock rather than shiver over booking that five dollars equals the parting with a nice hen?" "We are said to be chicken cranks, but we can't find out just what the appellation means. It doesn't mean the same to all our visitors. From consummate ass and driveling idiot to a scheming Shylock includes chicken cranks, and any man's perception of us doesn't make us one or the other," she added. "No, and you don't care a dead chicken what I think of you and yours. I am well reprimanded, not intending to deserve. Chicken cranks are myths, you and yours are esthetics and I a Shylock. These chickens do not pay you and yours. I have just about such a flock as this under like environment. Mine do not pay me, and I am honestly curious to know where people get on and off with a similar investment.

mistress put on a far-off missionary look and replied: "They pay you and you don't know it, and you ought to be made to know it. How can you look at such grand things and apprehend failures?" "Because they eat up dollars and return not a dollar and eight or ten or twelve cents for a dollar invested." "Have you kept the books yourself?" "No, haven't kept any books at all." "Then you do not know, of course, whether they pay or not. Let me show you my books for this year. The value of the fowls invoiced is what they have cost me to breed. We have bred all of our The houses and runs, the incubator and brod cost nothing this year, but I expect I could buy them for the quoted prices. I could not buy my hens for $75, because many of them cost me $5 each, and neither sire could be bought for less than $20 each. I did not sire far from $120, and we have actually sold $149 worth of merchandise. Besides we have twenty hens left and have incubated fifty chicks before May—before selling the one sire. The family has eatin four hens. The broilers from fifty chicks will reduce the number to twenty of the best before next year, and more can be May for $3 each, the sale of which will pay for the grains and bran and sundries, as we go along. We will have all the eggs we want to eat, which can be fresh and clean. The manufacturing establishment of the hen, I suppose, takes care of the filth it receives from manurefeeding hens, and makes as much of a grain in a manure heap as in one of our nice hoppers; but the sentiment is not to our liking. Yes, we are esthetics; we like giving nice things for the manufacture of nice eggs, and nice meat and nice fellows responding to us in how many ways—even to making us shiver contacting cold dollars. We will keep the best cockerel for a sire next year. The first year's expenses are great perhaps, but to grow the best of a kind of the proper kind year after year, one's expenses soon become matters of grains and repairs."

A Breeder Gives Some Practical Suggestions

Mr. J. J. Dean of Moneta sends in the following interesting details, based on actual experience with the raising of fowl on his home place:

"Four years ago this May, a neighbor gave me a pet
Minorca hen. Another neighbor had two fighting cocks, Buff Leghorns, and I made a bargain with him to trim his pepper trees for one of the coks. In a short time I brood of thrifty young chicks, still on the place—pensioned pets. After trying several different breeds, I settled on the Buff Orpington, as I consider them the best ali-around fowl, and shall continue to raise them until there is something suits me

"Starting in this way, gradually increasing the flock each year, has given me good experience in yarding, housing, feeding, etc. I raise all of my stock in the natural way, hatching only with hens, setting several at a time, and no more steps required to look after twenty than two. I find it is not a good idea to remove chicks from the nest too soon after they are hatched, When removed they are put in coops on board floors and fed nothing but grit until they are forty-eight hours old. These coops are two feet square, one-inch mesh wire on e has on more than one occasion been made ariment as to the advisability of selling eggs department as to the advisability of selling eggs, the rather than by the dozen. Reasons advanced schange were economic and commercial in chargesting of the subject after the hen fruit had been of and was on the road to market. The subject, iss also an important bearing beyond the section of price and market. Eggs vary in size, wight and flavor, quite as much as fruit and other than the programment recently carried on of the farm. Experiments recently carried on ther of the agricultural stations under the direcsaber of the agricultural stations under the directorized wilson have developed some rather in facts. Tersely stated, these have shown that profitable hen, from a standpoint of weight, was says the hen that produced the greatest number. In Wyandottes there was a range from 1.26 to make per dozen, a difference of over half a pound and of eggs. The hen producing the smaller egg, while the one producing the larger egg laid were less or 170. In selling eggs by the numbers after eggs would be the most valuable, providing tomer did not insist upon a reduction in price of size. In the case of these two hens the eggs (207) weighed 21.7 pounds, and the 170 eggs and, the 170 eggs weighing 3.8 pounds more than is Wyandotte-Leghorn cross hen' segg weighed the per dozen, while her two daughters produced thing 1.43 pounds per dozen. Another hen's ined 1.44 pounds per dozen and five of her produced eggs averaging 1.6 pounds per dozen. Leghorn hen producing eggs that averaged 1.45 or dozen transmitted her qualities to the off-ifour daughters produced eggs weighing 1.44. These tests demonstrate that the lack of unlesses of eggs can he overcome to a large extent. These tests demonstrate that the lack of uni-size of eggs can be overcome to a large extent reder, and that it is possible to build up a rollife layers of large-sized eggs.

HE TELLS HIS EXPERIENCE WITH A CHIGAGO BARBER.

By a Special Contributor.

ALK about fallin' into the hands of the Phillistynes, said Mr. Devery, just drop into the hands of one of these Chicago barbers an' you'll forget all about it. Of course there is certain periods of the operation where you don't know nothin' about what's goin' on anyhow. But you've got to come to. When you do, you could go up to a Phillistyne, shake him by the hand an' say, "Old man, they're handin' out a hot line of talk about you, but you for me. I'm your

You see there is barbers an' barbers. In Kansas City they give you the hurry-up trick, yank you out of the chair, trim you out of your bit, land you on the side-walk, an' say, "Next." You get some action. Of course there ain't no continuous joy in it. But you've got to get trimmed. You know that. An' the advantage of bein' shook down in Kansas City is that they don't give you no time to think about it. In Chicago it's differ-ent. They take their time. Here an' there they don't mind takin' your time if things is sort of dull. But that's neither here or there. There's nothin' to that. The point is that they ain't satisfied with doin' you up. They start in to gloat that they're going to do it, as soon as you butt into the place. Why, I started out to get a shave in Chicago a few weeks back an' the guy starts in to leer at me before I'd had a chance to down. I needed a shave an' I see the sign over the door, Petrolini Bros. I figured 'em out as possibly bein' a song an' dance team that had attended a revival meetin' song an' dance team that had attended a revival meetin' an' had got reformed. But I was wrong. They was a couple of Eyetalians. An' they was twias. When they got an eye on you from both ends of the moom, you didn't know where you was at. They got you comin 'an' goin'. Well, I walks down the steps an' opens the door. Petrolini the First, was clippin' chunks out of a guy's scalp with one of these tonsorial threshin' machines. He was bein' massaged. I takes off my hat. Pet gives me a side giance an' smiles, figurin' out that I was there to pay my respects an' bein' polite I lifted my lid. I didn't say nothin'. I just stands there. He waits a minute. Then he turns round to me an' says, "Sit down. We'll be ready for you in a minute." So I sits. If I'd had any sense I'd have passed out a dollar bill then an' had any sense I'd have passed out a dollar bill then an there an' trundled out. The trouble was I wasn't wise to the game. I was just a sort of suspicious an' uneasy. I had a notion there'd be somethin' doing. But I figured I'd see it through. I'd been up again one of them State street 35-cent banquets an' din't see what could happen to a man after that.

Well, I waits fifteen minutes. That's part of the Well, I waits fifteen minutes. That's part of the game. They get you up to that stage where you're really anxious to have 'em start in on you. That's what makes 'em want to laugh. It's up to you. You done it of your own free will an' accord, an' there can't be no kick comin'. An' they hand you out a copy of Puck, too. If you can escape Puck by goin' to Chicago to get a shave you're mistook. You see that's all governed by the union. All customers has to read either Puck of Judge. You can take your pick, but you've got to have one or the other. It's the work it does on the mind. After fifteen minutes of Puck and Judge, you're ready for anythin'. If you're havin' a shave an' a haircut, too, an' you make any funny cracks between the acts, they fi the cover on you an' you sink back into silence. They're gradually introducin' the Noo York Tribune for the the Noo York Tribune for same purpose. But it don't seem to catch on so well. It's all right till you get to the editorial page. But if you reach there you laugh sure. Then all the preliminary work that's been done on you's gone. Of course they figure that the chances is you'll stop before you've wreatled through the first page. If you do you'll be dazed enough to begin operations without any kick.

When they passed me over a copy I wasn't wise to the ame. So I fell for it till Pet throws the other guy out of the chair an' starts in to coax me to step up to the bat. As soon as I sat down I felt there was goin' to be somethin' doin'. Pet starts in to smile. He jerks my head back just by way of introduction to the game. There wasn't no good makin' a move. He could have had the half Nelson on me before I could have started to land. I just says "shave" an' lets it go at that. He to land. I just says "shave" an' lets it go at that. He knoo. He had the soap all ready. There was a quart of it all mixed up. You'd have thought he was startin' in to whitewash a barn. I didn't make no pass till he got it pasted over my eyelids. Then I stops him. "One minute," I says, "you needn't bother about shavin' off my eyebrows. It's a fad of mine to keep my eyebrows intact."

Of course I was a jay to have made any such crack. Pet was on. He passed his finger across the lather an' half gouges my eye out to show that there wasn't no wisdom in indulgin' in foolish conversation. After that take these Eyetalians. You make a crack that you think's goin' to jolly 'em along, an' first crack out of the box they give you the jab. I could see he was sore as soon as I spoke. After that I didn't get no chance to say nothin'. He lay for me with that brush like a cat lays for a mouse. If I'd opened my trap, I'd have got it. Then he starts in to get even. He balances the brush just ready to give it to me in case I makes a false pass. When he sees he had me faded on the speech line he swings his right back an' says, "Shine?" I tries to shake my top piece, but he holds me tight. Then he grabs m by the hair, raises my nut, jams it back on a tack in the ir, an' calls out, "Boy, the gentleman That was the signal. The charge was ck of the chair, an' calls out, wants a shine." on. Two guys comes up, grabs my legs an' starts in to polish my shoes. They start in to rip out my laces. I was wonderin' if they was goin' to put me to bed. At the same time a dame sails out from under cover, grabs my hand, shoves it into a basin of water an' procesharpen up her knives an' things.

"You wanted a manicure?" says Pet.

I would have give ten to have been loose. He was lyin', an' he knoo he was lyin'. But he flashes the lather brush on me an' I'd had enough of conversation. So they all sailed in. Pet starts in to shave, the blackhorse cavalry begins to polish, an' the dame makes a pass with the scissors. It was like a three-ringed circus. Of course I knoo I was up against it. But there wasn't nothin' to do. I could stand for the whole game except for this finger-nail business. An' I'd maybe have stood for that, too, if they hadn't trotted out a box of red paint an' started to make a pass at me with that.

"Look here," I says, watchin' my chance an' makin' a jump for it, "I'm here to get a shave, an' I don't propose to have no Chicago highbinders start in an' do the tattooin' act on me. You've started in on this nail-cutthe red, white an' blue paint. I'll take that a little later when I start in on the sailor business."

Of course, Pet, seein' he'd lost his grip on me, starts in apologizin', an' leads me back to the chair. An' he din't waste no time from then on. He pours some co-logne on my face an 'starts in to rub. An' I want to tell you that the way he let that stuff drip down my neck an' soak my collar so I'd have to get a noo one was a wonder. I was goin' to explain that I wasn't there for no bath, when he shuts me up with the hot towel trick.

An' maybe it wasn't hot. I got a glance at myself when I got out from under an' my face was like a holled lobthey come fast. There was just time to take a quick gasp an' sink back quiet between drinks. When he got the second one on, he gets the grip on me. His two thuffibs was in my eyes ready for a gouge, he stops up my nose with his two forefingers and with the rest of nis hands he stands ready to shove the towel down my throat in case of any further attempt at conversation. I braced myself good an' was standin' for it fine till he opens up an' says, "Are you hot enough?" Then I gets mad. But there was nothin' to it. He grips me tight till I calms down again. I'd have broke down if I hadn't heard Pet Junior over at the other end of the room say, "We'll be ready for you in a minute, sir." Then I had to laugh. Some other guy had come in. Of course i couldn't see him. But I nearly shook out of my seat thinkin' of what was comin' to him.

In a minute Pet sits me in the chair. Then I started in to figure up where I got off. There was 25 cents for the shave, an' 10 cents for a tip, 50 cents for the nail cutter an' a quarter on the side an' ten for noo laces, 25 cents for a collar, an' a dime for the guy that had my hat. I couldn't shake him or he'd tear the linin' out. That was a cinch. I could see where I was stung. ad my calculations made Pet turns round to me, grabs the top of my hair an' says, "Trimmed?"

"Yes," I says, "you can bet your life I've been trimmed," an' with that he lights a taper an' starts in to set fire to my hair. If I hadn't landed him there'd have been a conflagration. What's more, I wasn't even insured again fire. Well, the result was a rough house. The dame starts in to scream, the five barbers makes a pass for me with cologne bottles an' scissors an' after it was through they had the nerve to charge me with

HUMAN NATURE.

"Tis easy to be brave and good While riches on you wait, Or else to show the martyr's stuff Beneath the blows of Fate; Against the little pricks of life Tis harder to be great,

I'm sure if some catastrophe Should wipe my fortune out, I'd make some more right off, and hear The world applauding shout; But when my stocks go down a point, I only funk and pout,

I'm certain if an earthquake came My courage would be high, I'd meet it with resourceful plans And with a steadfast eye; But when I find I have to move, I merely want to die.,

I'm certain if starvation came My bearing would be glad, And I would give my final crust To some more hungry lad; But when I find the steak is burned It simply makes me mad

And so I hint to Providence, While sadly I deplore To make a hero out of me Regarding earthly store, I either need a little Or else a whole lot more. -[McLandburgh Wilson, in New York Sun.

When they passed me over a copy I wasn't wise to the game. So I fell for it till Pet throws the other guy out of the chair an' starts in to coax me to step up to the bat. As soon as I sat down I felt there was goin' to be somethin' doin'. Pet starts in to smile. He jerks my head back just by way of introduction to the game. There wasn't no good makin' a move. He could have had the half Nelson on me before I could have started to land. I just says "shave" an' lets it go at that. He knoo. He had the soap all ready. There was a quart of it all mixed up. Of course I was a jay to have made any such crack. Pet was on. He passed his finger across the lather an' half gouges my eye out to show that there wasn't no wisdom in indulgin' in foolish conversation. After that he starts in lathefin' again. After a while he starts in to smile once more.

"How do you like this soap?" he says.
"It's the finest I ever tasted," I says. With that he ams the brush up my nostrils an' I thought I'd choke to death. There's the trouble. You never know how to take these Eyetalians. You make a crack that you think's goin' to jolly 'em along, an' first crack out of the box they give you the jab. I could see he was sore as soon as I spoke. After that I didn't get no chance to say nothin'. He lay for me with that brush like a cat lays for a mouse. If I'd opened my trap, I'd have got it, en he starts in to get even. He balances the brush just ready to give it to me in case I makes a false pass. When he sees he had me faded on the speech line he swings his right back an' says, "Shine?" I tries to shake my top piece, but he holds me tight. Then he grabs me by the hair, raises my nut, jams it back on a tack in the back of the chair, an' calls out, "Boy, the gentleman wants a shine." That was the signal. The charge was on. Two guys comes up, grabs my legs an starts in to polish my shoes. They start in to rip out my laces. I polish my shoes. They start in to rip out my laces. I was wonderin' if they was goin' to put me to bed. At the same time a dame sails out from under cover, grabs my hand, shoves it into a basin of water an' procesharpen up her knives an' things.

"You wanted a manicure?" says Pet.

I would have give ten to have been loose. He was lyin', an' he knoo he was lyin'. But he flashes the lather brush on me an' I'd had enough of conversation. So they all sailed in. Pet starts in to shave, the blackhorse cavalry begins to polish, an' the dame makes a pass with the scissors. It was like a three-ringed circus. Of course I knoo I was up against it. But there wasn't nothin' to do. I could stand for the whole game except for this finger-nall business. An' I'd maybe have stood for that, too, if they hadn't trotted out a box of red paint an' started to make a pass at me with that.

"Look here," I says, watchin' my chance an' makin' a jump for it, "I'm here to get a shave, an' I don't prohave no Chicago highbinders start in an' do the tattooin' act on me. You've started in on this nail-cutthe red, white an' blue paint. I'll take that a little later n I start in on the sailor business.

Of course, Pet, seein' he'd lost his grip on me, starts of course, Pet, seein ned lost his girl chair. An' he in apologizin', an' leads me back to the chair. An' he din't waste no time from then on. He pours some cologne on my face an 'starts in to rub. An' I want to tell you that the way he let that stuff drip down my neck an' soak my collar so I'd have to get a noo one was a wonder. I was goin' to explain that I wasn't there for no bath, when he shuts me up with the hot towel trick. An' maybe it wasn't hot. I got a glance at myself when I got out from under sn' my face was like a boiled lobster. I got it in five spasms. One after another. An' they come fast. There was just time to take a quick gasp an' sink back quiet between drinks. When he got the second one on, he gets, the grip on me. His two thumbs was in my eyes ready for a gouge, he stops up my nose with his two forefingers and with the rest of nis hands he stands ready to shove the towel down my throat in case of any further attempt at conversation. I braced myself good an' was standin' for ft fine till be opens up an' says, "Are you hot enough?" Then I gets mad. But there was nothin' to it. He grips me tight till I calms down again. I'd have broke down if I hadn't heard Pet Junior over at the other end of the room say, "We'll be ready for you in a minute, sir." Then I had to laugh. Some other guy had come in. Of course I couldn't see him. But I nearly shook out of my seat thinkin' of what was comin' to him.

In a minute Pet sits me in the chair. Then I started in to figure up where I got off. There was 25 cents for the shave, an' 10 cents for a tip, 50 cents for the nail cutter an' a quarter on the side an' ten for noo laces, 25 cents for a collar, an' a dime for the guy that had my I couldn't shake him or he'd tear the linin' out. That was a cinch. I could see where I was stung. Just as I had my calculations made Pet turns round to me, grabs the top of my hair an' says, "Trimmed?"

"Yes," I says, "you can bet your life I've been trimmed," an' with that he lights a taper an' starts in to set fire to my hair. If I hadn't landed him there'd have been a conflagration. What's more, I wasn't even insured again fire. Well, the result was a rough house. The dame starts in to scream, the five barbers makes a s for me with cologne bottles an' scissors an' after it was through they had the nerve to charge me with

"Tis easy to be brave and good, While riches on you wait, Or else to show the martyr's stuff Beneath the blows of Fate Against the little pricks of life Tis harder to be great.

I'm sure if some catastrophe Should wipe my fortune out, I'd make some more right off, and hear The world applauding shout; But when my stocks go down a point, I only funk and pout.

I'm certain if an earthquake came My courage would be high, I'd meet it with resourceful plans And with a steadfast eye; But when I find I have to move, I merely want to die.,

I'm certain if starvation came My bearing would be glad, And I would give my final crust To some more hungry lad; But when I find the steak is burned It simply makes me mad

And so I hint to Providence, To make a hero out of me Regarding earthly store, I either need a little less Or else a whole lot more. -[McLandburgh Wilson, in New York Sun.

FIELD NOTES.

Handicapping the Farmer.

LEARN from an acquaintance who lives in Washington City that the Senate has been more willing to advance the work of the Department of Agriculture in many instances than has the lower house. Certain actions relating to the pure food bill bear out this statement all too freely. From this the farmers must not infer that the members of the House of Representatives are further from the soil than are the Senators, for the reverse is the fact—as a rule. But it does mean that a cog is slipping in the legislative machinery of the assembly. Under the present methods of conducting the work of the national legislature the committees are almost supreme, and if one of them happens to have a grievance against a department, woe is the plans of that department. For two years Secretary Wil-son's administration has been going through fire, and It has emerged unsinged, but somewhat smutted with its contact with those who prey upon the farmers' industries. To overlook the agricultural needs of the country because a strong chief of this department has, shall and ought to wield a strong power is to overlook the inter-ests of every other business. Farm and commercial organizations should see that no petty committee jealousie or antagonisms stand between a great department and

Moth Traps Again.

FTER a desistance of many months another flowing claim upon the utility of the codling moth trap falls my hands. I shall not enumerate all the insects that this new lantern trap will catch. At least twenty species are mentioned, such as the "current-moth" (no-tice the spelling.) the "grape-vine moth" and the "slug moth." It is very strange that none of these humbug devices will capture the codling moth when used by an entomologist. And yet such is the universal report from our local men and observers all over the country. The use of these so-called traps is not only not bene-ficial but actually harmful, as they will catch many parasitic insects, some of which may attack the apple w It seems necessary to warn some of the farmers against biting at these baits thrown out everywhere in such at-tractive typographic art. But this is the time of the year for frauds of this character. One hopeful sign is that the reading portion of the American farmers do not patronize these humbugs, for a lantern-trap moth ex-terminator is not blazoned in one of the agricultural journals that reaches The Times.

Century-Old Alfalfa

THE editor of the Field and Farm says he once met a venerable padre of Mexico who said his alfalfa patch had been planted over two hundred years and had never been reseeded during that time and had yielded four crops of hay regularly every year. The history of this wonderful plant is somewhat shrouded in mystery, but the Grecian historians tell us it was brought from Media, in Asia, to Greece, in Europe, during the reign of Darius, about five hundred years before Christ. Its culture extended to Rome, thence to the south o France, where it has been a favorite forage plant. It grows wild with luxuriance on the pampas of Buenos Ayres. It was brought into Mexico by the early Spanish conquerors, and from thence found its way, about the middle of the past century, to the Pacific Coast, now Southern California. It did not reach Colorado, where its growth has attained a state of perfection, until 1862, when a small quantity of seed was brought from Mexico by Major Jacob Downing, who planted it in a dooryard in Denver, and from whence it spread until it now covers many thousands of acres in the Rocky Moun-tain region and extends out into the plains as far east as the "Father of Waters.

Fruit Juice Preparations. . . LARGE new corporation is preparing to engage in A the production of non-alcoholic beverages, the eern being composed principally of vineyardists. It has been dawning upon the American people for some years that it is not the only mission of the vine to dispense alcohol in the least objectionable manner, but that the juice of the grape may be prepared and preserved unfermented to the health and delectation of the people. The ap-plication of this idea in the State of New York has laced vine growing upon a more profitable basis, and there is great rivalry every season between the fresh grape shippers and the fruit juice companies for possession of the grape crop. The demand for pure grape juice in California has already established in the South several successful factories, one of which at Pomona declares the demand so great that the new concerns are not looked upon as rivals in business. With the extension of fruit juice enterprises will come the opportunity of the small grape grower, who, like the New York vineyardists, will find two markets for his fruit, and the grip of the wine trust, if there be one, will be loosened. If two drops of grape juice can be made to flow where one flowed before, let one of them at least flow through without fermentation.

The Bane of Mischief.

THE Highway Commission of Los Angeles county re-

the amount of labor this commission has bestowed in Growing Oats. naming and marking the principal roads of Los Angeles county, and it seems incredible that these depredations would be allowed to continue. I have heard of very few of the rural mail boxes being interfered with, and the reason is that the United States authorities would follow up any damage done to the boxes and punish the authors of the annoyance. In choosing the material for the guide-boards one of the chief points of consideration with this commission was the selection of boards as near rifleproof as possible. The postoffice department does not find it necessary to provide bomb proof boxes. Is this trouble with milestones and guide boards caused by the failure of the local peace officers to run down and punish these infractions? Surely there be no other way of accounting for the destruction while government boxes are unmolested.

No Local Agricultural Course.

MINDOTONIO

WOMAN who is an ex-teacher asks this department A why no provision is made by our local colleges for agricultural instruction. Because the patrons of these schools have not become aroused to the importance of it. Further more, those who govern the colleges are not up to date on this question, though surely they are abreast of the times upon everything else concerning the administration of our schools. To have a doctor or a lawyer, or a civil engineer is the great ambition of scores of families whose sons and daughters are attending our local institutions of learning. In one of our States almost entirely depending upon agricultural pursuits, and which has provided an excellent agricultural college, only one in six of the boys attending the States schools for a number of years has devoted his studies to agriculture, and many of these had no definite object in so doing. The various faculties of Southern California could do something to change the course of thought to seds of agricultural education; the patrons could bring the reform by furnishing the students.

The Powell Investigation.

G-AROLD POWELL has nearly concluded his in-tion of citrus fruits for the season, and will soon trans-fer his activities to a new field. Few other than those most directly associated with Mr. Powell realize the extent and thoroughness with which this inquiry has been conducted, yet when his report is published, all will see the scope and benefits involved in this investigation for which the citrus fruit growers and every interest in State are under obligations to the Department of Agri-culture. The work this year has had to do with the relation of different methods of handling fruit in packinghouses, to the carrying quality in transit. It has con pared unbrushed, brushed and washed perfect fruit with unbrushed, brushed, washed and mechanically injured fruit shipped under ventilation, icing and pre-cooling They have included a large series of shipments to deter mine the effect of delaying the fruit in packing-houses different lengths of time after picking, and from the orchard standpoint it has followed the mechanical injury that takes place in picking.

Result summary: In a large number of tests unbrushed fruit has developed 1.5 per cent. decay; dry-brushed 4 per cent.; washed 12.5 per cent., and mechan-ically injured 36 per cent. at the end of two weeks. The perfect brushed and unbrushed fruit has developed practically no decay under the three methods of ships The decay has been most serious in washed and mechanically injured fruit, worst in ventilation, next in icing, and least in pre-cooling. There has been most decay in fruit held in the houses several days after packing, worst in washed and mechanically injured fruit. In the or-chard the clipper cutting has been reduced from 15 to 20 per cent. in 1905, to 5 to 8 per cent. in 1906. A great deal of injury takes place from stem puncture in the oldstyle packing-houses with overhead runways. The in-jury of this kind is from 3 to 5 times as great in washed as in unwashed fruit. There appears less inherent difference in the fruit so far as decay is concerned in different parts of the State. Unbrushed, brushed and washed fruit behaves in a similar way in all parts. Sound, clean fruit, shipped quickly after picking, as cool as possible at starting reduces the losses from decay to

From the experience gained in this investigation the growers will not be slow in taking advantage of this new light. Our growers have needed showing in these lines r some time, but they will not delay in the application of means of correcting the conditions that have proven detrimental to the fruit in transit by this inquiry. Enterprise has never been a lost quality among these peo-ple. They have given Mr. Powell the most thorough and intelligent cooperation in making the test, in some cases sacrificing temporarily for the good of the investigation. How much farther it will be necessary to conthese inquiries Mr. Powell and the growers perhaps have not fully decided, but the field has been so rich in discovery and the application of experience—in the working out of principles that will be beneficial to all classes of fruit growers that there should not be much difficulty in securing the continuance of these re-searches until every fault has been reached. With as thorough an investigation of the cultural principles that lie behind the transportation of fruit, the influences of climatic conditions and the breeding of purer strains of our leading varieties the industry should feel that all organization has established along some of the main was being done to place the growing and marketing of highways of the county. Few of the taxpayers know fruit upon the most favorable basis.

This pine is particularly valuable for railroad ties, beof the ease with which it takes preservatives. wood is yet abundant in the forests of Northern Colorado, Wyoming, Eastern Idaho and Southern Montana. It has been ascertained that in the Medicine Bow forest reserve, some 165,000,000 feet are available for cutting now, without imperiling the future usefulness of the st or the water supply furnished by the mountains. Let this work of forest regulation be extended until it will embrace still larger areas of the public domain. greatest waste of the resources of this country has been made in connection with its forests.

Now number the ears to correspond with the squares. Take three grains from each ear and on a cloth in the square bearing the s number as the ear. Put another cloth on top of the grains and place the box in a warm place. five days they will have sprouted. Now start with ear one. If all three of the grains from that ear have sprouted vigorously, it will do for seed, but if the grains fail to germinate or show weak and spindling spro throw the ear aside, and so on for every ear. In this way, almost a perfect stand can be secured which means a much larger yield per acre.—[F. B. Mumford in American Cultivator.

The Most Beautiful ow All Grasses.

THE pampas grass (Cortaderia argentea, known among florists as Gynerium argenteum) is the most beautiful of all the taller grasses. It forms large tufts from which, during the latter part of the season, are produced the long stalks bearing beautiful silvery-white plumes. There are also varieties with plumes ranging from rose to carmine, violet, and purple. The plume self, when grown in California, often reaches three feet If left to mature on the plants, the plume become frayed, and assume a dirty-white appearance, but this does not diminish their value in the landscape, and they will last in fairly good condition until the cold weather approaches.

The foliage is long, narrow and drooping, and its fountain-like habit would alone make it a desirable plant for the garden. Exclusive of its plume-bearing stalk, which sometimes rises to a height of eight or ten feet, it makes a beautifully symmetrical plant, six to eight feet high. The best plumes are produced on the seed bearing plants.

The popular name of "pampas" grass is misleading, for it does not come from the pampas of South America, but from the mountains, and usually is found growing alongside water courses, or in depressions, where there is a constant supply of moisture from some underground

The plant is a perennial, but, unfortunately, is not hardy in the Northern States; so, in order to carry it over, it must be dug up in the fall, the leaves trimmed off to within a foot of the ground, and the ball stored in a damp, but not wet, cellar, where frost will not reac it. In May, the plants are brought out of storage, all the loose leaves removed, but not the old stalks, and the clump is planted at the same depth as before.

As far north as Rochester, N. Y., plants have been wintered out-of-doors, in sheltered places, by first giving a heavy mulch, and then covering with an inverted box filled with dry leaves, hay or straw

For perfect specimens, plant in light, rich soil, with a poderate amount of moisture, at least during the early period of growth.

The plant is easily increased by dividing the roots in the spring, or by seeds, which will produce flowering plants in two years.

There are many varieties in the trade, and all have Latm names. These differ from the type in height, variegation of foliage, or color of the plume.—

An Old Palm Rediscovered.

FOR many years (a score, perhaps) students of the palms have marveled at the great diversity of growth our weeping palms (Washingtonias), without than a mere suspicion that we were growing two distinct as different types of one (Washingtonia filifera)

That the identity of the other species (W. robusta) vas not sooner discovered, is remarkably strange in view of the fact that careful measurements of our oldest prove that robusta grows just four times faster than filifera. Grown under identically the same conditions, W. robusta, at twenty years of age, had made forty feet of solid (matured) trunk, while the more common species had made but ten. The deeper and more constant greeen of the robusta palm is a strong point in its favor as a decorative plant. Other points wherein it differs from the more common species (W. filifera). are: its shorter petiole or leaf stem, its more compact habit and the darker color of all its parts. The base and edges of the petiole are light brown in W. filifera, but violet black in W. robusta. The same difference of color is noticeable even in the trunk, W. robusta being much the darker of the two. The seeds of robusta are only about one-half as large as those of filifera and differ in shape. What difference there may be in the floral structure, it is hoped to determine during the coming sum-

Washingtonia robusta has grown rapidly in public favor during the past few years, due to the fact that it oses, to the commoner W. filiis superior, for many purposes, to the commoner W. fill-fera. When we had watched it for several years and noted its rapid growth, it became evident that for street alignment it surpassed all palms heretofore used for the

The claim so often made by dealers that W. robusta is the hardier of the two species, is utterly without foun-dation, W. filifera being the hardier. The claim is based, no doubt, on the fact that W. robusta does not get "rusty" on the leaf tips as does the common species. This rustiness does not come from the leaf being nipped by the frost, for often the greatest part of such coloration comes in late summ

It may be as well to correct a popular misunders ing regarding the needs of these plants. They do not "grow in the desert sands without water." Neither do they grow on the desert at all, nor in the sand, nor without a constant supply of water. They grow in the without a constant supply of water. They grow in the cafions and depressions of the foothills bordering the desert, usually in black "adobe" or "gumbo" soil and where they get a considerable water supply. This water generally holds in solution so much alkali that it cannot be used for drink by man or beast .- [Garden Magazine.

Value of Beans and Peas.

FRESH string beans, sugar peas, and shelled peas, like other fresh, succulent vegetables, contain considerable water, which, with the materials dissolved in it, forms the plant juice. They somewhat resemble cabbage in percentage composition. Fresh shelled beans, peas and cow peas contain a fairly large amount of protein or nitrogenous material, the nutrient which serves to build and repair body tissue as well as to furnish energy. They also contain considerable carbohydrates and small amounts of fat, both these classes of nutrients serving to supply the body with energy. The amount of ash or d'matter in the legumes varies in amount. It doubtless serves the same purpose in the body as mineral matter found in other food materials. The canned le-gumes, which are simply cooked foods sterilized and kept in such a way that they cannot ferment, resemble in composition the same materials uncooked. legumes contain some water, though to the eye they seem to be perfectly dry. The contain a high percentage of protein, in this respect surpassing the other seeds commonly used as food, such as wheat. They approach animal food as regards protein and total nutritive most of the legumes containing carbohydrates in place of the fat found in animal foods. Fats and carbohydrate, however, serve the same purpose in the body, although the fats yield two and one-fourth times as much energy per pound as carbohydrates.-[California Cultivator.

The Rubber Plant in Colorado.

Witten deposits the has been much W written concerning the so-called rubber plant of Colorado, and many roseate predictions have been made as to the industrial possibilities it opened up. But as far as Colorado is concerned, the whole industry is yet in experimental stages.

The Guayule plant, or rubber plant, has been known to the Mexicans since the seventeenth century. The state of Durango, Mexico, has two factories for extracting the rubber from the plant. One of these factories has been in successful operation for about a year.

In Colorado the plant grows wild; seems to thrive best at an altitude of about 8000 feet and under semi-arid conditions. Experimental factories in Denver and at Buena Vista have already proved that the purest of rubber can be obtained from the plant. High-grade auto-mobile tires made from this rubber are now on exhibition in Denver.

The only question is, whether under Colorado labor questions it is possible to gather the plant, extract the rubber and place it on the market at a profit in competition with the tropical product. A rubber company with ample capital has been organized with headquarrubber industry, if possible. They have leased 500,000 acres of rubber plant land from the government and, if present tests as to the possibility of manufacturing the rubber at a profit prove at all favorable, a factory of great capacity will be immediately erected at Durango.

The Colorado agricultural experiment station has rubber plants growing in its experimental fields at Fort Collins. The feasibility of growing the plant at a low altitude and under irrigation is now being tested, and these tests will be followed by breeding experiments designed to increase the rubber content of the plant.

Food That Breeds Cancer.

N EXCHANGE reports the British-American Journal as stating that carefully compiled statistics show an enormous increase of cancer in the last forty years in the large American cities.

Dr. Robert Bell believes that the falling away of health, which gives opportunity for the development of cancer, is due chiefly to vitiation of the blood, and that the prime factor in this is the overtaxing of the digesting and assimilating organs, especially by an excess of animal food. Those persons who eat the least flesh of domestic animals are, as a rule, the healthlest. Much of the excessive flesh eaten is not digested, but decomposed, forming enterotoxins, and vitiating the blood. With constipation, there is much absorption of fetid matter. Dr. Bell, further on in his pamphlet, relates that a prominent butcher stated his opinion that 60 per cent. of stall-fed cattle have cancerous livers. The meat of cattle thus horribly diseased is sent to big cities minus the incriminating portions.

We know the effect of much meat on recovery from wounds. The blood being overcharged with impurities a wounded flesh eater has much less chance than an abstainer. During the Indian mutiny, of fifty years British army surgeons were astounded at the rapid re-covery of the native troops—who are strict vegetarians— from wounds that would inevitably have proved fatal in the case of a white eater of flesh. Again, in the Rus Japanese War, it was difficult to kill the Japanese, who are largely vegetarians, and they recovered quickly from wounds that in almost any other army would have been regarded as fatal. We all know that a slight scratch is often fatal to butchers, and men who work in slaughter-

If such is the effect of a flesh diet on the blood, we may readily understand how the large consumption flesh food—especially pork—may lay the foundation of a disease like cancer. It is said that cancer is unknown among orthodox Jews. Again; if such is the effect of flesh food that is comparatively clean, what must be the effect of the filthy and diseased fiesh food so largely turned out by American packing-houses?

Many people are inclined to doubt the truth of statements in regard to conditions prevailing in the Chicago packing-houses, as disclosed by Upton Sinclair, in The Jungle, of which an extensive review was published a couple of weeks ago. There is certainly excuse for the incredulity of these people, for the disclosures made in that volume are so utterly and overwhelmingly hor-rible, that it is difficult for the average American to believe that men like these millionaire packers who hold up their heads in society could possibly be so utterly lost to self-respect. As stated, however, the truth of these statements has been fairly well substantiated. In the first place, the publishers of the book sent an attor-ney to make careful investigation, before they would accept it, and secondly, as Sinclair says, the packers have had plenty of chance to bring suit for heavy damages against the publishers, if the statements are untrue. That they have failed to do so may be interpreted on the basis of the old adage which declares that "silence gives consent.'

Another verification of the truth of the statements made by the author of The Jungle is found in the folarticle, by George Janovish, published in Physical Culture, for June:

"I have been an employé of a packing-house for some years, and have had experience in all departments of the business, so that I am enabled to write with authority on some matters which I wish to bring before the public through Physical Culture. In the first place, we ee the government inspection stamps on all boxes, barrels, etc., in which meat is packed by the big firms in the West, and these stamps the public accepts as guarantees that the boxes, etc., contain pure and wholesome meats. As a matter of fact these stamps are put on by employes of the packing company just before shipping.

"The government inspector does not see what is shipped, as his business is to inspect live hogs, and the bodies of animals just after they are killed. The inspector at the place at which I was employed passed all hogs that were able to walk. Those that had to be hauled to the killing-room, had their ears cut off before being killed and dumped into the 'dead tanks' where all hogs were put that died of disease. After the bodies of these last were rendered, the oil was pressed ou which last is used for burning and other ed out of the grease,

"The last inspection on 'good hogs, known) is just as they are opened and the intestines taken out. At times the inspector is not present at such periods. This is the last official inspection of any kind, except that made by the employes of the company.

"All the bones, and scraps of fat, mixed with tobacco spit, etc., are thrown in the tank. I have seen bodies with an odor strong enough to kill a maggot dumped

"The heads are skinned, the tongues and cheeks are taken out, the eyes are left in the heads and thrown in the tank. The floors are scraped, and the dirty grease taken from it, dumped in the tank.

"All this filth and diseased flesh makes our 'fine, pure kettle-rendered lard.' After it is rendered, it is run into another tank, a lot of English clay put in, and that is the way that it is 'purified.' There is nothing wasted, everything is turned into lard.

"In the curing department, the meat, after strong brine is pumped into it (which is made of salt, nitrate of potash, and water—they call this pickle) is piled on dirty floors, and salt thrown on it: this is repeated about evtwo weeks for five or six times.

'A test is made to see what change in weight takes "A test is made to see what change in weight takes place in meat while curing, which takes about sixty days. One side of meat weighed fifty-three pounds when fresh, and sixty-fve pounds eight weeks later, after the pumping process. There is about from one to one and one-half pounds of nitrate of potash in every hundred pounds of meat. Pumping the meat so many times is not necessary; twice is enough, but to make it gain in weight it is pumped five or six times. The hams are pumped, then packed in tierces, the latter filled with pickle and stored in the cellars. In about two months, these hams are taken out of the tierces, rolled in the mud and piled on a dirty floor in a cellar. They are then taken to the smokehouse, put in tanks where they are colored, and cleaned with scrub brushes, and then hung in the smoke. After they are smoked, they are packed for shipment. The sausage-room is the place where all the spoiled meat is used up. Meat that is sour, no matter how bad it smells, is put in a tank in which there is a strong pickle, which has a great deal of nitrate of potash in it. After it has been in the tank about a month, it is used to make sausage. If it is still sour and smells bad, they make bologna sausage and frankfurters. They use plenty of spices and bicarbonate of soda to sweeten and kill the odor.

"They make a bologna sausage that is made almost en tirely of kidneys, most of which are never washed and are often diseased. At least 75 per cent. of the meat that is used in the sausage-room, if inspected according to law, would be put in the dead and diseased hog tank."

A dispatch from Washington, dated May 25, announced that the condition of the packing-houses was severely that the condition of the packing-houses was severely criticised by the President. In an interview with a representative of the Chicago stockyards, the President announced that he proposed to see conditions of which complaints have been made in the packing-houses changed as promptly as possible; that the buildings should be remodeled in order to obtain better ventilation and more light; that ample facilities should be provided for employés, far enough removed from the rooms in which the meat was prepared for food to prevent con-tamination, and that there should be lavatories to insure rsonal cleanlines

The packers, themselves, are beginning to express concern, and to promise reforms. Not because of any regard for the people—"the public be damned"—but because sales of packing-house products have, of course, fallen off seriously, both here and abroad, under such horrifying disclosures. Be sure, however, that any such reform will be only spasmodic and temporary, unless eternal vigilance is maintained by the public.

Another effect of the disclosures made in The Jungle has been that the United States Senate passed the agricultural appropriation bill, carrying an appropriation of $7,800,000, and without a word of debate or an objection from any source added to it as an amendment the providing for an inspection of fresh meats intended for domestic consumption. The provision is along the general lines of the law for the inspection of meats intended to be shipped abroad, and the work is delegated to the Bureau of Animal Industry. It requires that acceptable meats shall be labeled, and authorizes the destruction of condemned products. It also authorizes inspection of all animals before they enter the packing-houses; requires that those establishments shall be maintained in a sanitary condition; gives the inspectors access to all departments of them, and forbids interstate commerce in fresh meats which are not marked by the inspectors. The expense of the inspection is to be borne by the owners, and a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for two years are fixed as penalties for the violation of Incidentally, it may be suggested that laws are of little or no use, unless they are strictly inforced. Our statute books are cumbered with laws that are made only to be broken.

In an open letter, addressed to "The Newspaper Editors of America," Sinciair, referring to the methods of the beef trust, says:

"For nearly two years now I have been contending against these secret influences. They have sent men to bribe me; they have put detectives at work tracing my past, in the hope of finding something to compromise me; they have circulated falsehoods about me in the newspapers, and tried to influence my publishers against bringing out my book; they have discharged men in the formation; they have called others up to their offices and threatened to discharge them for selling the book. They have sought to annoy me in still more petty and objectionable ways; and I am resolved to try to make them come out into the open and fight.

"Every time that a campaign of exposure against the Chicago packers has begun in the magazines they have spent literally millions of dollars in advertisements.

"If you saw a man committing murder, and you rushed to interfere, what would you say to a person who offered you an advertisement if you would stop? Yet here is a man who is ngaged in murder by wholesale, in a day routine of his business, and he offers you vertisement so that you will not let his viction what he is doing."

Surely, it is a sad and sickening and hu for patriotic Americans, to see these milli-packers, for the sake of filthy gain—filthy in than one—poisoning the people by wholes inmates of public asylums, where this co largely used. Meantime, on the one h their employes barely living wages, and condown the price paid for cattle, while on the they combine to get the highest prices for thand to kill off all possible competition, by r lawful rebates from the railroads, in con which some of them are now fugitives f Worst of all is the fact that, in both houses these men have pliant tools, who, for the s money, are willing to advance every possible to the passing of laws that would protect the public from the rapacity of these millionaire

Dr. Thomas, to whom the correspondent refers, appears to be a shrewd, money-making physician. He was for a time allied with Macfadden, of Physical Culture, and advertised extensively in that publication. Then they separated, and now Thomas is advertising, in another health journal, to give away $3000 worth of Physical Culture Restaurant Company stock (Bernard Macfadden, president) of which company Thomas was viceresident, the apparent object being to create distrust in the minds of the people in regard to the value of the stock. Thomas is said to charge high prices for his advice on health, the value of which may be estimated partly from what the above correspondent says, and partly from the statement that, in some cases, he recommends two gallons of milk a day, with eggs, and etceteras. He also administers pills of some kind. The editor has heard of persons who have become afflicted with kidney disease, as a consequence of following one as's programmes.

The correspondent is also right, in regard to the folly of endeavoring to drink a large quantity of water, whether you are thirsty or not. Where the stomach is sensitive, this is sure to aggravate symptoms. In some cases the "dry diet" cure, as recently described in this department, is helpful and effective.

In regard to the Battle Creek Sanatorium—speaking from experience in several of the branch establishments, from experience in several of the branch establishments, and not having been at Battle Creek—the editor, as previously remarked, believes these people are doing much good, although he thinks their dietary is imperfect. It is also quite probable that, as the correspondent says, they allow patients to brood too much over their allments, and especially over what they shove into their stomachs. As the editor has frequently observed, brooding over what you eat, and how it is going to work, inevitably leads to dyspepsia, and perhaps to insanity. First make up your mind what is good for you, then eat only enough to satisfy hunger, and dismiss the subject of digestion from your mind altogether.

As to raw food, it is a good thing, within reasonable mits. There is no doubt whatever that cooking food is, to a great extent, spoiling food, and that the nearer a person approaches to a raw food diet, the better for his health. In this way he will obtain far more of the highly important and necessary organic salts, that are, to a great extent, wasted in cooking. At the same time the editor would not recommend a diet of raw vegetables. It is not necessary. Why should a person eat raw turnips, and carrots, when appetizing fruits, nuts and salads and grain "in the milk" can be obtained? However, an occasional dish of raw vegetable, either sliced, or and mill, and thoroughly chewed, make valuable addition to the diet. A few months ago the "discovery" of raw vegetable juices, as a remedy for con-sumption, was blazoned forth in the press, as a great and new thing. Well, that is much better than cod liver oil, anyhow.

Probably the best and most complete book on the sub-ject of raw food, is that entitled "Uncooked Foods and How to Use Them," written by Eugene Christian, of New York, and published by the Health Culture Publish-ing Co., 151 W. Twenty-third street, New York. It was reviewed in this department some time ago. Mr. Christian, by the way, was arrested last year, at the instigation of the New York State Medical Association, for the awful crime of giving people advice in regard to a rawfood diet.

F. M. B. sends the following communication: "I have been close watching your very ably-edited department of the Sunday Times for some comment or talk on rheumatism. In a climate such as this, where every man (making a mental reservation that there are a few exempts) together with his man-servant and his mald-servant, his ox and his ass, are all hopping around with this very common bedevilment, I am sure that the smallest crumb falling from your editorial table would be read with interest by hundreds of readers. Can you ject, according to the light you have and thereby, possibly, help out some of us poor devils who are on the fence, as to whether it would be better to hark back to course of drug-taking or 'grin and bear it' a while longer. In hopes of hearing a voice out of the wilderness crying salvation through some other means, I am, etc.

You don't need either to "grin and bear it"not for an indefinite time—or to take drugs. If you take drugs, you will probably have to bear it, with or without grinning, and perhaps something worse. The cor-respondent is mistaken in intimating that rheumatism is unusually prevalent in Southern California. Where Sylmar Oilve Oil is of unvarying highest quality. The always favorable conditions of a matchless climate insures the growth of a superior fruit, season in and season out. The additional fast that these olives are all of the same grade and not gathered from here and there, makes the oil produced from them uniform—rich, wholesome, "as palatable as cream." The Sylmas ranch, with its 2000 acres and 12,000 trees, is the largest of its kind in the world; here every process of production has reached the most improved state, and every detail is carried out, from the growing to the bottling, under our most vigilant inspection, insuring a perfect oil of absolute purity.

Care of the Body.

found here it is often due to the fact that people eat as erywhere, and is always due to the same cause—errors in diet. Of course, we all know that chills, or anything of that kind, will bring on an attack, but that is merely the proximate cause. The poison has been in the blood, and the shock has given nature a chance to make an effort to throw it out, just as in the case of a cold.

Rheumatism is one of the most troublesome diseases with which physicians have to cope. Many of the "reg-ular" school admit that they have to give it up. Like ular" school admit that they have to give it up. Like all other ailments, however, it is amenable to a natural system of cure, based on common sense, and the removal not merely of the effects, but of the cause of the rheuma-tism. What makes rheumatism so hard to cure is because it is the result of a long-continued storing up of poisonous matter in the body, which finally accumulates in the muscles. The difference between rheumatism and dyspepsia is this: It is something like a fellow trying to break into hell—if such a proceeding could for a moment be regarded as presumable. We will suppose that he meets opposition, and has trouble at the gate, and does not succeed in getting in. Perhaps he gets mauled about, but he is lucky not to get in. That is the dyspeptic. Another case comes along and gets in easily. There his real troubles begin. That is the

A dyspeptic has his troubles in the stomach. The food is never properly digested. It turns to gas, and makes him feel miserable all the time, but such a man may hang on and become a bad-tempered octogenarian dyspeptic. On the other hand, your man with the digestion of a hog turns everything into blood. No trouble at the gate for him. The stuff is digested, and the surplus, or foul matter in the food, is stored up in the form of adipose tissue or uric deposits, that finally settle in the muscles, in course of years showing themselves in the form of rheumatism. Thus, you will rarely find that a person with a very weak stomach suffers from rheumatism, unless the weakness of stomach has been acquired late in life. Therefore, in one way, it may be said that it is an advantage to have a weak digestion. However, you need neither have indigestion nor rheumatism. If you know how to live right, and are willing to do so.

Dr. Alexander Haig, of London, has shown the great damage done by uric acid, which abounds in flesh food, and is also found, to a limited extent, in the bulls of beans and grain, and to a larger extent in tea, coffee and cocoa. Like many other discoverers of an important fact, Dr. Halg may be inclined to overestimate its relative importance—or, rather, to ignore other equally im-portant dietetic features—but he is certainly on the right portant dietetic features—but he is certainly on the right road in condemning the use of flesh foods, as a menace to health. It should be remembered that uric acid, like other toxic products, may be formed in the system by erroneous dietetic habits, even if no ment is caten.

As to diet, then, avoid uric acid foods. Eat only enough to satisfy hunger. Chew your food thoroughly, and eat plentifully of the depurating foods, containing plenty of organic saits, such as fresh fruits, saiads and vegetables, with their juice—eaten raw wherever it is practicable. In addition to this, breathe fresh air day and night, do enough physical work to get a moderate perspiration every day, take a sweat bath of some kind—preferably an electric-light bath—at least once a week, sponge with cold water every morning, followed by a sponge with cold water every morning, followed by a vigorous rub, applying at night, over any affected part, wet cloths covered with flannel, sponging off in the morning. Massage, or vibration, or osteopathy will belp. Electricity is only a temporary stimulant. All drugs of whatever kind, are either useless or harmful, or They may temporarily change the symptoms That's all.

Fasting is an exceedingly valuable means of aiding in the cure of rheumatism. Here is an example of good results from fasting, combined with osteopathic treatment Mrs. P., of Los Angeles, a married woman, 36 years of age, a friend of the editor's family, was eighteen months ago in desperate straits. She had an exceedingly severe case of rheumatism. In addition to that, she had kidney and womb ailments, chronic constipation, and was, in fact, a physical wreck. Several of the leading physicians of Los Angeles had declared that they were unable to do anything for her, and that her case was hopeless that time, acting on the advice of the editor, Mrs. P. placed herself in the hands of a sensible osteopathic physician, who at once prescribed a seventeen-day fast. After four months, another fast of twenty-four days was taken. Since then, the diet has been much restricted— no breakfast, two meals a day, no meat, the diet consisting mainly of vegetables, fruit, milk, eggs and swieback, thoroughly masticated, osteopathle treatments being given regularly, which, however, would have helped little, but for the fasting and the diet. Mrs. P., who eighteen months ago was bedridden, is now able to move around a little. She is otherwise in perfect health, and has gained about twenty-five pounds. If she perseveres, in another year she will doubtless be able to move around with the best of them. That will make two and a half years. A long time, you will say. Yes, but better than being a chronic bedridden invalid for the rest of your life, as several prominent doctors declared Mrs. P.

The underclothing is quite important. The best of all underclothing to wear is ramle, regarding which an article was recently published in this department. In this, the editor speaks from experience. He has been told of some remarkable cures of rheumatism, made by wearing ramie underwear. Of this he personally knows nothing. Any such cures would, of course, be merely temporary, if the wrongs that cause the rheumatism are

Finally, don't expect that a disease, which has perhaps been accumulating in your system for twenty years, can be cured, even by the most complete hygienic treatment, in twenty days. Be assured, however, that, if you are in twenty days. Be assured, however, that, it you are not cured in this way, you will not be cured in any other way. To cure this, or any other disease, caused by breaking the laws of nature, is as simple and certain as the rising and setting of the sun. It needs, however, will power, patience and perseverance—and these traits are not nearly so common as they might be. Nicht wahr?

Back to Los Angeles.

DR. GEORGE C. PITZER, a teacher and practitioner books on the subject during the past few years, has been located consecutively at St. Louis, Los Angeles, St. Louis gain and Denver. He writes that he will again locate in this city, on June 10, and will buy a home here as on as possible after arriving.

THE following "resolve," by Charlotte Perkins Stet-

To keep my health! To do my work! To live! To see to it I grow and gain and give! Never to look behind me for an hour! To wait in weakness and to walk in power: But always fronting onward to the light, Always and always facing toward the right, Robbed, starved, defeated, fallen, wide astray— On, with what strength I have!

Back to the way!

THE following good advice is from Medical Talk:
One of the things that every housewife should look after carefully is the kitchen sink. Many a good house wife will keep the enameled part of the sink spotfess the woodwork polished as white as possible, and imagine that her sink is clean. This is all right; the sink should be kept spotless from every stain or discoloration, but the cleaning must go farther than this.

"The pipe that is hidden from view should be kept just as clean as the porcelain part. Crumbs, tea leaves and greasy water, matches, and little bits of this, and little bits of that find their way into the pipe, and it soon be-comes clogged. This sometimes occasions a plumber's bill and makes carclessness in this regard very expenbill and makes carclessness in this regard very expensive, but more than the plumbers' bill the dirty sink pipe may occasion filness. It cannot help but give off impure odors, thus vitiating the atmosphere of the kitchen, and contaminating everything around it.

"A good device is a fink strainer. Care, however, should be taken in other ways also. In washing dishes every dish should be cleaned of particles of food before every dish should be cleaned of particles of food before being put into the water. Every day or so boiling water should be poured into the pipe. A piece of common soda dissolved in the water will help remove any greasiness from the pipe. Milk should never be poured down the sink, because it causes the pipe to become sour.

"With just a little care the housewife can keep the pipe of the sink free from grease and dirt; then, with a clean pipe, spotless enamel and polished woodwork, the kitchen sink will be sweet and wholesome and a credit to the one who takes care of it."

Physicians and Priests.

RECENT dispatch from Rome stated that "Dr. Lap-A RECENT dispatch from Rome stated that "Dr. Le poni, during the day, visited the Pope, and orde him to bed. He obeyed, reluctantly."

Does it not seem strange, when you think of it, that a man who is supposed to hold in his possession the keys of heaven and hell, cannot prevent, or cure, a slight in-disposition in his own body?

In olden times, the priests were also physicians. Jesus devoted fully as much time to healing the body as to preaching and teaching about the soul. It would be well if the functions of the physician, the lawyer and—if you will—the priest were combined, today.
In order to teach, however, you must first know.

when—as for instance—you see an eminent M.D. and his family eating such a grossly unhygienic supper as meat stew and milk—iced milk, at that—how can you possibly expect to receive rational dietetic advice from such a man? How can you? "Blind leaders of the blind" are such men, indeed. It is encouraging to note, however, that many physicians of the "regular" school are studying diet and discarding drugs.

Fear-Fashion-Foolishness.

W HAT a vest amount of misery, of worry, of positive suffering, is caused, in what we term "civilized" life, the striving after things that are unnecessary, and often undesirable. How many foolish people miss the true happiness of life, because they are always striving to leep up appearances—to emulate their wealthier neighbors—to live beyond their means. Men are by no means guiltless, in this respect, but it must be admitted that the women, as a rule, take the lead in efforts to outshine their neighbors.

When you analyze this sentiment, you will find it is but another form of that hydra-headed monster Fear, the greatest enemy of the human race. It may appear as Anxiety, Worry, Timidity, Indecision, Shame, Superstition, or in many other forms. How many women-of men, either, for that matter-are ready to do what they believe to be right, and proper, and appropriate, or to refuse to do what they believe wrong, utterly regardless of what people may say? How happy is the man, or woman, who is in the exceptional class. This does not mean that you should walk down Spring street barefoot, or otherwise ignore the unwritten laws of society, so far as thex are harmless, but that you should not fear to wear shabby or out of date clothes, when y wear snabby or out that you should not fear the fashionable and wealthy Mrs. Jones, a plin church, and leader of society, although filled with meanness and all uncharitableness, while you Mrs. Smith, who does her own washing, so young children, and makes her own cheap though she appear in presence of your friends. No person is really free and inde ever high his station in life, however we be, who carries about on his shoulders the scribed: "What will people say?" Break awaj if you would be happy—if you would make the you happy. Think for yourself. Be your a Don't believe what priest or physician may you have weighed it in the scales of your ow n, may you truthfully declare:

"I am the master of my fate, I am the captain of my soul."

FHENCHMEN SAID TO PRACTICE ON FREINDS WITH WAX BULLETS.

[London Mail: ] Among the different weapons used for duels, pistols are the most common, since the recent proposal of a well-known sportsman who suggested to fight with braces and bits (each opponent wearing a board on his chest) was not successful.

As a rule, Frenchmen who do not know the art of fencing choose pistols when honor demands a duel. A week before the encounter they go to M. Gastinne-Renette, the celebrated expert and maker of arms de luxe, and shoot a few hundred cartridges at a target. These people forget that they will be quite disconcerted by the raising of their opponent's arm to fire. On the field, emotion shakes their arm and they miss their adversary. der to train these duellists, Dr. Devillers, a well-known personality in sporting circles, started a society called "L'Assaut au Pistolet," the object of which is to train its members in view of an eventual duel.

Dr. Devillers kindly invited me to witness one of his seances at the Jardin de Paris. The competitors, wearing an ordinary fencing mask with a small square of thick glass at the height of the eyes and a long black blouse, stood at the regulation distance of twenty-five yards. Commandant Ferrens ordered "Feu! . . . un, .!" and they had to fire between "feu" and "trois," about four seconds measured with a metro-an initial speed of ninety-five yards per second. are quite harmless, and some of these apprentice duel-lists do not even wear the black coat. The pistols used are ordinary ones; the only alteration consists in a small shield which protects the trigger. Dr. Devillers told me his society counted more than 100 members, among whom are the best shots of France. They meet every Friday in the Champs Elysées.

This reminded me of a jealous husband who used to exhibit in his smoking-room half a dozen targets, with remarkably clever shots in the center (he had made the with a pencil!), and two photographs of Merignac and Kirschoffer, the famous fencers, with this inscrip-"To my best partner."

Dr. Devillers's training cannot make a good shot of everybody, as natural aptitudes are necessary to shoot well. M. Gastinne Renette says that two things must be learned. (1) How to press gradually and regularly on the trigger; (2) to avoid any nervous contraction and to breathe quietly. Shooting is a marvelous training of the wifi, and develops self-possession. Trifling circumstances, a good dinner, an exciting play, are sufficient to spoil one's shooting.

Sometimes chance plays a great part in this sport. M. Joseph Renaud in London once hit with his pistol a puppet two inches high at twenty-five yards. As the head was still hanging on the string, some one said, joking: "You ought to hit the head now!" M. Joseph Renaud answered nothing and aimed at another puppet with another pistol, but quite by accident the second bullet smashed the tiny head of the first puppet. All present were amazed at M. Renaud's extraordinary skill! Shooting "at command" is generally used in real duels.

The opponents stand at twenty or twenty-five yards dis-tance; they are asked: "Are you ready?" raise their tance; they are asked: "Are you ready?" raise their arm at the word "Fire," and must shoot before "three!" This is the method practised by Dr. Devillers. However, there is a second one which consists in placing the adversaries back to back; they walk fifteen or twenty steps in opposite directions, quickly turn round at the order, and fire at once.

The third way is called "au visé." In this method of duelling the opponents aim at each other so long as they choose before firing.

It should be pointed out that ready-made cartridges are never used for duels; the pistols are loaded by the muzzle with bullets and powder.

Another interesting personality in the duelling world is Dr. Aumont, a clever fencer himself, whose assistance is required very often.

He has already served as doctor at more than eighty fights, and thoroughly knows the psychology of duels. He always carries a small bag, containing a complete set of indispensable surgical instruments, in order to be able to attend a wound

In the course of an interview Dr. Aumont pointed out that the conditions of modern duels have changed entirely. Twenty years ago duellists in Paris met Island de la Grande Yatte, in the middle of the Seine. This had one great disadvantage. In the winter the duellist might escape a bullet, but rarely escaped a Now the majority of duels are fought near the Big Wheel. There is a heated hall with an adjoining drawing-room and bar. Sometimes ladies witness the fight, and they are often more bloodthirsty than the legal witne

I remember, some years ago, six duels being fought at the same time under the shadow of the Big Wheel. It was a regular performance which reminded the spectators of the first act of Dumas's "Three Musketeers

The romantic tendency of their ancestors has not yet vanished from the character of modern Frenchm Some weeks ago a few prominent swordsmen propo to prohibit in the future compte-rendus of duels in newspapers. These gallant gentlemen assumed that private affairs of honor which ought not to b revealed to the public. They forgot that the majority of persons who "exchange cards" do it in view of the reports of the newspers, which will advertise them in a

Hence the failure of their suggestion!
